Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the numbers of (i) direct maternal deaths and (ii) indirect maternal deaths registered in England and Wales in each of the three-year periods 1985-87, 1988-90 and 1991-93 which were of women born in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Republic of Ireland, (c) the New Commonwealth and Pakistan, (d) other countries and (e) unstated countries.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table. Information for 1993 is not yet available.

Deaths of women aged 16 to 50 from complications of pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium by country of birth, 1985-87, 1988-90 and 1991-92, England and Wales

[1] International classification of diseases 9th revision—ICD9—630-676 cover complications of pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium. Of these, ICD9 647 and 648 may be considered indirect causes of the pregnancy as they cover conditions in the mother classifiable elsewhere in the ICD9 but complicating pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium. The remaining conditions may be considered direct causes relating to pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium.

Notes:

1. There may have been other deaths to women who were pregnant or had recently given birth where this information was not shown on the death certificate or was not selected as the underlying cause of death.
2. There are no data yet available for 1993.

Hospital Integration Support

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 21 April, Official Report, columns 661-62, which hospitals received financial support under the hospital integration support systems project; and to what amount in each year.

Mr. Sackville: Tables have been placed in the Library which identify those hospitals which have received either capital or revenue funding from the hospital information support systems initiative.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) officers and (b) ambulance men and women were in post per thousand resident population in each year since 1991-92 in each regional health authority.

Mr. Sac[illegible] [holding answer 19 May 1994]: The information available is shown in the tables.

Mouth Cancer

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many notifications and deaths from mouth cancer have been recorded for each of the last five years, by region, age, gender and socio-economic group.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 23 May 1994]: Data on cancer registrations for England and Wales and for the regions by site, sex and age are published in the "Cancer Statistics", series MB1. Tables will be placed in the Library which show the number of deaths from mouth cancer—international classification of diseases 140-145—by regional health authority, age, sex and social class.

Waiting Lists Initiative

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 424, if she will provide details of (a) funds allocated for each regional health authority under the waiting list initiative announced 17 February and (b) how much of each regional health authority allocation was spent on the purchase of services from independent sector providers, giving details of the independent providers involved and the value of the contracts.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 23 May 1994]: The information is shown in the table. Initial returns show that at least 38,000 in and out-patients have benefited from earlier treatment as a result of the Government's initiative.

Health Visitors

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many health visitors are employed in each district health authority area;

(2) how many health visitors are employed in relation to the number of children in each health authority area.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 26 May 1994]: The information will be placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all non-governmental organisations, international associations and companies which received funds from Her Majesty's Government for projects in China together with the projects and the amounts involved in each case for 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A list of those projects that received United Kingdom bilateral assistance in 1991-92 and 1992-93, showing expenditure and the organisations involved, has been placed in the Libraries of the Houses.

Under the European Union co-operation programme, disbursements to China in 1991-92 and 1992-93 were 24 mecu—£18·47 million—United Kingdom share £2·96 million.

ODA contributed £304,000 to the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation over these two years for an artificial limb factory project in Fuzhou.

The World Food Programme's food aid commitments to China for 1991, 1992 and 1993 totalled 412,000 tonnes.

The United Nations Population Fund, the International Planned Parenthood Federation, the United Nations Development Programme, the United Nations Children's Fund and the Food and Agriculture Organisation have programmes in China. Our contributions to the core budgets of these agencies in 1991-92 and 1992-93 were as follows:

UNFPA	16·5
IPPF	14·5
UNDP	58·0
UNICEF	18·5
FAO	19·8

I refer the hon. Gentleman to the annual reports of the World bank, the International Finance Corporation and the Asian Development bank, which are in the House of Commons Library, for details of the activities they support in China.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what gaps there are in the food pipeline to Rwanda; and how is it proposed to close them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Despite major logistical problems, the World Food Programme is maintaining basic food supplies to all the refugee camps bordering Rwanda, and is also moving supplies into both north and south Rwanda. We are providing £1·25 million of emergency food aid. In addition, we have given two mobile grinding mills to WFP for the production of maize flour, at a cost of £290,000.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about cholera outbreaks in Burundi and the extent to which these are connected with refugees from Rwanda; and how the international community is responding to them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Some 60 cases of cholera have been reported in the Burundian capital, Bujumbura, with no evident link to refugees from Rwanda. United Nations agencies are presently monitoring the situation.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the role of the World Health Organisation in a crisis such as the situation in Rwanda; and what assessment he has made of how the organisation is fulfilling that role in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The World Health Organisation has responded quickly to the situation in Rwanda. It is a member of the United Nations humanitarian advance team in Nairobi and has also participated in the United Nations flash appeal. It has dispatched seven emergency health kits—each provides medical supplies for 70,000 beneficiaries for three months—for Rwanda refugees in surrounding countries. It is establishing four stations to monitor cross-border assistance into Rwanda. It is too early to assess how well the WHO is fulfilling its role as the leading health agency in this emergency situation.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the findings of the recent Overseas Development Administration mission to Rwanda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Overseas Development Administration mission visited the Kagera region of north-western Tanzania, the Kabale district in southern Uganda, and the Byumba prefecture in northern Rwanda on 21 to 26 May 1994.

The mission found that the British emergency aid already provided has been used effectively and was much appreciated, and that the relief efforts of the UN agencies, particularly UNHCR in northern Tanzania, the non-governmental organisations and the Red Cross movement were impressive and well co-ordinated. The political situation remains volatile and the refugee exodus is continuing. External emergency aid will be required for the foreseeable future.

The main conclusions of the mission are that our future strategy should focus on:

improving the strategic planning and management of the overall humanitarian aid operation expanding the operational capacity of non-governmental organisation implementing agencies to reach refugees/displaced in greatest need responding to the governments of Tanzania and Uganda concerns regarding the environmental impacts of the crisis.

As a result of these findings, my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development announced on 2 June that Britain is allocating a further £5 million of emergency aid to support displaced and refugees in Rwanda and neighbouring countries. This brings the amount of emergency aid provided bilaterally since April 1994 to over £11 million.

Aid (Military Expenditure)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what element of military expenditure is included in Britain's aid figures.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Multilateral Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of Britain's aid budget contributes to multilateral aid; and how this has changed over the past five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows:

Multilateral assistance as a percentage of total ODA assistance

	Percentage
1988-89	41
1989-90	37
1990-91	36
1991-92	45
1992-93	46

Ethiopia and Eritrea

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he estimates to be the scale of the present food shortage in Ethiopia and Eritrea; what are the problems that he expects to arise in the coming months; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the international response to the problem.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Further to my answer of 10 May, col. 79, the World Food Programme reports that 1994 food aid pledges to Ethiopia stand at 900,000 tonnes. For Eritrea, the WFP and the FAO estimate 1994 food aid needs at 255,000 tonnes, of which 180,000 tonnes have been pledged. The main priorities in the coming months are to fulfil pledges promptly and to ensure adequate and timely distribution of food aid to areas in need.

Aid Budget

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of Britain's bilateral aid budget is spent on humanitarian relief; and how this percentage figure has changed over the past five years.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows:

Bilateral humanitarian assistance[1]
as a percentage of total ODA bilateral assistance

	Percentage
1988-89	8
1989-90	5
1990-91	6

[1] ODA uses certain multilateral agencies as a means of delivering assistance to individual countries. This expenditure has been included in the figures above in order to provide a complete picture of ODA's bilateral humanitarian assistance effort.

OECD Development Assistance Committee

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries in central and eastern Europe now qualify as developing countries recognised by the OECD's development assistance committee.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All countries in central and eastern Europe which receive aid are listed in the Development Assistance Committee's list of aid recipients. Those which appear in that part of the list detailing countries whose aid receipts count as official development assistance are: Tajikistan, Armenia, Kyrgystan, Georgia, Uzbekistan, Azerbaijan, Turkmenistan, Kazakhstan, Albania and the states of ex-Yugoslavia. Full details are given in the Development Assistance Committee chairman's report for 1993, entitled "Development Co-operation: Aid in Transition", a copy of which is held in the Library of the House.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of gross national product in rank order is contributed in and by each member of the OECD's development assistance committee.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information is as follows:

Net Official Development Assistance as a Percentage of Gross National Product in 1992, all DAC Donor Countries

	Percentage
Norway	1·16
Sweden	1·03
Denmark	1·02
Netherlands	0·86
France	0·63

Germany	0·39
Belgium	0·39
Portugal	0·36
Australia	0·35
Italy	0·34
United Kingdom	0·31
Japan	0·30
Austria	0·30
Spain	0·26
Luxembourg	0·26
New Zealand	0·26
United States of America	0·20
Ireland	0·16

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Britain counts debt forgiveness for non-Overseas Development Administration export credits in ODA totals; and whether care for asylum seekers is counted in his figures for overseas development assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Debt forgiveness in relation to officially supported export credits is included in the United Kingdom's total official development assistance figures in accordance with the OECD Development Assistance Committee's guidelines. In the financial year 1992-93, the total debt forgiven for agreements under the Toronto and Trinidad terms in respect of officially supported export credits was £51·1 million.

Assistance to asylum seekers is not included in the United Kingdom's total official development assistance.

Food Aid

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans there are to transfer responsibility for programmable food aid to the European Community Humanitarian Office; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on this matter.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There have been reports for some time that the Commission was considering transferring responsibility for all Community food aid to the European Community Humanitarian Office. However, we know of no firm plans to do so. Were the Commission to take this step, which is within its management prerogative, our attitude would be based on our assessment of the impact the move might have on the overall effectiveness of Community food aid.

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the Government's review of the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 15 March, Official Report, col. 586.

Central and Eastern Europe

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much was spent on aid to central and eastern Europe this year; and how much has been spent in each of the past five years, with the overall percentage change in spending over the period.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Figures for the current financial year and for 1993-94 are not yet available. Bilateral spending in central and eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union in previous years was as follows:

£ thousands

	CEE	FSU
1989-90	63,888	31
1990-91	14,673	2
1991-92	27,025	26,845
1992-93	32,719	15,832

The CEE figure for 1989-90 includes an exceptional United Kingdom contribution of US$100 million, £61·71 million, to the currency stabilisation fund for Poland. If this is excluded, spending in the CEE increased over the period 1989-90 to 1992-93 by 1,402 per cent. When the FSU is included, the percentage increase is 2,097 per cent. The figures exclude United Kingdom contributions made through multilateral agencies.

North-West Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the role of the World Health Organisation in the development of areas such as north-west Somalia; and what assessment he has made of how the organisation is fulfilling that role in north-west Somalia.

Mr. Lennox Boyd: The World Health Organisation informs us that, in addition to providing emergency assistance to north-west Somalia, it is establishing longer-term support to enable improvements to the existing health care system, better disease control and continuing provision of vaccines and drugs. Reports to date suggest that the WHO has made some limited progress in difficult circumstances.

Albania

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy the European Union has on giving aid to Albania; and when he expects that such assistance will reach Albania.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The European Community programme of assistance to Albania started in 1991, initially in the form of humanitarian and food aid. It was extended in 1992 to include longer-term technical assistance under the PHARE programme and balance of payments support. The allocations for humanitarian and food aid have been fully disbursed together with the first tranche of balance of payments support. A further tranche of balance of payments support is expected to be agreed shortly. Approximately half the technical assistance so far committed under the PHARE programme has been disbursed.

Crown Agents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role the Crown Agents have in the procurement cycle in relationship to private military, security or police companies.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Crown Agents have associated with Securicor plc on a number of tenders to public sector bodies. They have not placed any orders under this arrangement.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what private military, security or police companies are currently under contract or licence to the Crown Agents.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None, other than the employment of Pegasus Security Group by the Crown Agents to meet their own office security requirements.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has received from the Commonwealth Institute about its future; and when he intends to respond.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The institute's board has prepared the outlines of a relaunch plan. This will be examined in further detail at the board's executive committee meeting on 21 June at which the Secretary of State's representative will be present.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations or proposals he has from the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland about its future; and what response he has given.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The chairman of the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland has submitted a plan for keeping the body in being after 1996. This will be examined at the institute's executive committee meeting on 21 June, at which the Secretary of State will be represented.

South Africa

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the procedures and time scales involved in dealing with a South African application to rejoin the Commonwealth.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Commonwealth Secretary-General announced on 31 May 1994 that, following consultations with member Governments, he had accepted South Africa's application to rejoin the Commonwealth and its renewed membership would be effective on 1 June 1994.

Proposals will be put before the House in due course to give effect to South Africa's resumption of Commonwealth membership as it relates to Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

Private Members' Bills

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since April 1992 Ministers from his Department have (a) requested parliamentary counsel to assist in preparing amendments to private Members' Bills on behalf of other private Members and (b) authorised officials to instruct parliamentary counsel to prepare amendments which were subsequently passed to private Members.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Parliamentary counsel drafts not on behalf of private members but on the instructions of Departments acting on the authority of Ministers. With the authority of Ministers, amendments were drafted by parliamentary counsel on the instructions of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and subsequently passed to the private Member sponsoring the Antarctic Bill.

Rwanda

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he supports the appointment of special rapporteurs for Rwanda and Burundi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We supported the creation by the Commission on Human Rights of the post of special rapporteur on Rwanda and welcome the appointment of Mr. Rene Degni Segui. No member of the United Nations has called for the appointment of special rapporteur on Burundi, where the United Nations is focusing on preventive action.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the obstacles to the implementation of the United Nations Security Council's decision to deploy 5,500 troops in Rwanda; and how it is proposed to clear these obstacles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The main obstacles will be to obtain the consent of both parties and to identify member states willing to contribute troops and equipment to the operation.

The secretariat is working on these issues, and the Secretary-General is due to report to the Security Council on progress in the near future.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Nations Security Council intends to meet again about Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council has discussed Rwanda in informal sessions several times since the adoption of Security Council resolution 918. The council will meet again in due course to consider the Secretary-General's report called for in SCR 918.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list for each of the last five years, the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: The table shows the identified costs of consultancy work by the named companies used by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic and aid wings in each of the last five financial years.

Information on all other consultancies could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The amounts spent on the named consultants by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office Aid and Diplomatic Wings are as follows:

For Year	KPMG £	Touche Ross £	Price Waterhouse £	Ernst & Young £	Theodore Goddard £	Capita £	CSL Group Ltd. £

Yemen

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which EC countries plan to offer sanctuary to non-Yemeni nationals resident in the Yemen who are forced to flee due to the civil war but whose travel documents do not confer a right of settlement elsewhere.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have not discussed with our European Union partners the subject of sanctuary for those leaving Yemen.

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has to assist impartial non-Yemeni nationals caught up in the civil war in the Yemen to whom the facility of embassy help is not available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Nationals from 23 other countries were evacuated with British citizens on flights arranged by the FCO which left Sana'a on 9 and 12 May. The British embassy in Sana'a continues to offer consular advice to British citizens and to unrepresented European Union and Commonwealth nationals who inquire.

Kurdish People

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had, and with whom, concerning the rights of Kurdish people living under the control of the Turkish Government.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed human rights and the problems of the Kurdish region of south-east Turkey with the Turkish Prime Minister and Foreign Minister in Ankara in January and in Istanbul last week.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the exact time and date on which his Department were made aware of the contents of the statement made by Mr. Mak Foon Than Drax in Hong Kong in August 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We became aware on 23 August 1983 of certain allegations made by Mr. Mak to the Royal Hong Kong police.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the names of all those who attended a meeting at 10.30 am in the chambers of the Attorney General of Hong Kong on 17 January 1985; and in what capacity each person was present.

Mr. Goodlad: The meeting held on 17 January 1985 took place in the office of the Financial Secretary and was attended by the late Sir John Bremridge, Financial Secretary: Michael Thomas, Attorney General; Mr. Chooi Mun-Sou; and an official from the Attorney General's office.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total time spent on bail awaiting trial by Mr. George Tan in Hong Kong since 1983; and when the Governor estimates that the trial of Mr. Tan might reach a conclusion.

Mr. Goodlad: George Tan was first arrested by the Independent Commission Against Corruption in April 1983. He has been on bail since then, except for a brief period when he was in custody. His trial is expected to reach a conclusion in 1995.

United Nations Specialist Organisations

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department has given to each of the United Nations' specialist organisations in each of the past five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department's contributions to the specialised agencies of the United Nations in each of the past five years are set out in the table.

FCO (including ODA) contributions to United Nations specialized agencies (£ sterling)

	1989	1990	1991	1992	1993
United Nations Industrial Development Organisation (UNIDO)	2,075,631	2,519,459	2,468,841	2,781,607	3,322,588
Food and Agricultural Organisation (FAO)	8,610,850	9,625,688	10,095,585	10,466,825	12,130,211

Iran

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific measures Her Majesty's Government (a) have taken and (b) plan to take to combat the activities of Iranian terrorists in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are very concerned about continuing reports of Iranian involvement in terrorism. We watch Iran's actions very closely but do not comment on specific measures taken to combat this problem.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the conclusions of the parliamentary human rights group report on the extra-territorial interference by Iran with Iranian citizens in exile, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We found the parliamentary human rights group's report on Iran a timely and useful contribution to the debate on Iran's human rights record. We remain seriously concerned at reports alleging Iranian responsibility for the assassination of dissidents in exile.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations he has initiated into the recent allegations that the Iranian Government have given support to the IRA.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our investigations have shown conclusively that there have been contacts between Iranian intelligence and the IRA. We shall continue to watch Iran's actions very closely to satisfy ourselves that there are no further exchanges.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information has been issued in both the diplomatic and aid wings. It includes a leaflet and application form available to members of the public on how to apply to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office under the code and guidance circulars to staff explaining the code and how to respond to inquiries received under it. Copies of these documents have been deposited in the Library. The aid wing will be issuing a leaflet for public use later this month. Additionally, the FCO's code of practice inquiry unit refers, as necessary, to the central guidance on interpretation.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts are being made in the European Union to assess the impact of the common agricultural policy upon developing countries and to alleviate any damaging effects.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The common agricultural policy was reformed in May 1992, partly because dumping of surplus produce on world markets under the European Community's agricultural policies was clearly affecting developing countries.

The United Kingdom is pressing for reductions in EC price support and for better targeting of remaining support towards environmental and social objectives without detrimental effect on developing countries.

International Terrorism

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what joint initiatives Her Majesty's Government have proposed at the United Nations to combat international terrorism.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our European partners have expressed our continuing concern in the United Nations General Assembly and the United Nations Commission on Human Rights about the problem of international terrorism. The resolution adopted at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights specifically urged the Government of Iran to refrain from activities against members of the Iranian opposition abroad and to co-operate whole-heartedly with the authorities of other countries in investigating and punishing offences reported by them.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise at the next political co-operation meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council the measures required to combat the activities of terrorist groups from outside EU member states operating within the European Community member states.

Mr. Hogg: There are no plans to raise this subject at the next meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council but we do have regular contacts with our European Union partners about how best to tackle the problems of terrorism.

Indonesia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Indonesian Government over the death of the trades union activist Ms Titi Sugiasti in Bandung, West Java in April.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand that the Indonesian police, who are investigating the case referred to by the hon. Member, have not yet drawn any conclusions from their inquiries. The British embassy in Indonesia will continue to monitor developments.

Anti-personnel Mines

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the United States-sponsored resolution in the United Nations calling for an immediate halt to the export of all anti-personnel mines; and if he will set out his reasons.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom supported this resolution; however, in doing so, we stated our view that anti-personnel land mines directed at military targets are legitimate defensive weapons. If they are used in accordance with protocol II of the United Nations weaponry convention, and particularly if they are fitted with self-destructing or self-neutralising mechanisms, they do not pose the same dangers to civilian populations. We think that it would be wrong if possession of self-destructing or self-neutralising anti-personnel mines were restricted to countries with the capacity to manufacture them; and therefore we do not consider that such mines fall within the scope of this resolution.

China

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government regarding the re-arrest of Wei Jingsheng.

Mr. Goodlad: European Union representatives in Peking last month expressed to the Chinese authorities the concern of all European Union Governments about the arrest of Wei Jingsheng and requested his immediate release.

Malaysia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each visit made to Malaysia by Mr. N. MacKillop of the Royal Hong Kong police in connection with the Carrian and related cases since 1983; whether the Malaysian authorities were formerly notified of each of these visits; and whether the Malaysian authorities were given access to all the documents obtained in Malaysia by Mr. MacKillop, including those found in a vehicle in Kuala Lumpur.

Mr. Goodlad: There was one visit to Malaysia by two senior officers of the Royal Hong Kong police, one of whom was Mr. N. MacKillop. The visit was official and was arranged through Interpol. At all times the Malaysian authorities were aware of the visit. No documents were seized and the officers concerned have no recollection of any documents being found in a vehicle in Kuala Lumpur.

Law of the Sea

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the United Kingdom timetable for signing the UN convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The UN convention on the law of the sea—UNCLOS—is no longer open for signature. We are considering whether to accept the proposed agreement on the implementation of part XI of the convention and thereafter whether to accede to UNCLOS.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to which major maritime nations will not sign the UN convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The UN convention on the law of the sea is no longer open for signature. The United Kingdom, United States and Germany did not sign the convention when it was open for signature.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which have signed the new law of the sea convention; and if he will list them.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Some 155 states and four other entities signed the law of the sea convention when it was open for signature between 1982 and 1984. Some 61 states have now ratified or acceded to the convention. I have placed in the House of Commons Library a list of signatories and one of ratifiers and acceders.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to which developed countries are expected to sign the United Nations convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Most developed countries, but not the United Kingdom, United States or Germany, signed the United Nations convention on the law of the sea after it was opened for signature in 1982. No major developed country ratified the convention. Many may now do so following the adoption of the agreement on the implementation of part XI of the convention, which the General Assembly is to consider in July.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the timetable for the adoption of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Nations convention on the law of the sea was adopted by the third United Nations conference on the law of the sea in 1982. The agreement on the implementation of part XI of the convention will be considered by the United Nations General Assembly with a view to its adoption in July 1994. The convention itself comes into force on 16 November 1994.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the likely timetable for agreement to be reached on part II of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea; and if he will list the countries which have raised objections to it, indicting the nature of the objections.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Part II of the United Nations convention on the law of the sea has not been the subject of any negotiation since UNCLOS was concluded in 1982. Many industrialised countries objected to the terms of part XI, concerning deep seabed mining, including the United Kingdom, United States and Germany, which refused to sign the Convention. The United Nations Secretary-General's consultations on part XI, which began in 1990, have recently been concluded. A draft resolution and a draft agreement on the implementation of part XI will be submitted to the United Nations General Assembly on 27 to 29 July. I have placed in the House of Commons Library a copy of the draft resolution and agreement.

Embassies and Consulates

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the annual cost of British embassies and consulates in (a) the United States and (b) the world.

Mr. Goodlad: The annual cost of British embassies and consulates in 1992-93, the latest financial year for which final expenditure figures are available, was:

(a) the United States £33 million.
(b) the world £365 million.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of the role played by British embassies and consulates in protecting the rights of British citizens when travelling abroad.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The functions which consular officers may perform are set out in article 5 of the Vienna convention on consular relations and the corresponding provisions of the bilateral consular conventions.

The role of consular officers varies according to the circumstances of individual cases. Each year consular staff overseas deal with over 2 million inquiries from British citizens.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are made to respond to urgent facsimile or other messages concerning immigration cases that are sent by his staff to British embassies during public holidays.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All British diplomatic missions overseas designate a duty officer to attend to urgent matters which arise outside normal working hours.

Arms Control Department

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why his Department's arms control and disarmament department has been disbanded.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The arms control and disarmament department has been disbanded as part of a wider redistribution of work on defence, security and non-proliferation issues aimed at providing a more coherent and effective response to the international security challenge that we now face, including in the areas of arms control and disarmament. All work formerly done by ACDD has now been reallocated either to the non-proliferation department or to the security policy department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is not FCO practice to issue public consultation documents.

Overseas Crime

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department and British consulates overseas take to ensure that British citizens who are victims of crimes committed in overseas countries are guaranteed access to justice under the legal system pertaining in the country where the crime is committed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Where British nationals become victims of crime in other countries, consular officers will ensure that they are advised how to report the crime to the local authorities and, if appropriate, assisted to do so. It is for individuals to pursue redress through the local legal system, based, if necessary, on advice given to them by a local lawyer.

Criminal Justice Procedures

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Government receives representations from foreign Governments relating to citizens of those Governments involved in cases before British courts; and if his Government make representations to foreign Governments relating to British citizens involved in cases before the courts of those Governments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are not aware of any recent case where a foreign Government have questioned judicial proceedings. Interventions are not made by British officials in cases which are before properly constituted courts in foreign countries.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that the Government ratify the chemical weapons convention by the time it is scheduled to enter into force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are committed to ratifying the chemical weapons convention and will introduce the necessary implementing legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Cyprus

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when (a) he and (b) one of his Ministers next plans to visit Cyprus (i) to discuss a solution to the problems of the island and (ii) for other purposes.

Mr. Goodlad: There are no plans for a visit to Cyprus by an FCO Minister in the immediate future.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he plans to support Cyprus's application to join the European Union.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom has welcomed Cyprus's membership application. There are clearly difficulties in Cyprus joining the European Union while the intercommunal dispute remains unresolved. The Council will review Cyprus's application early in 1995 in the light of developments in the intercommunal process. Meanwhile, the United Kingdom supports the Commission's talks with Cyprus to familiarise it with the EC's existing legislation.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Ministers have visited the Republic of Cyprus since 1979 (a) to discuss a solution to the political problems there and (b) for other purposes; who those Ministers were; and which Cypriot Ministers they met.

Mr. Goodlad: Ministerial visits to Cyprus since 1979 are set out in the table:

(a) Ministerial visits to Cyprus to discuss a solution to the political problems there:

April 1980 – Lord Privy Seal (Rt. Hon. Sir Ian Gilmour) met President Kyprianou and Foreign Minister Rolandis.

October 1983 – (Lady Young), Minister of State, FCO met President Kyprianou, Foreign Minister Iacovou and Defence Minister Veniamin

October 1993 – The Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary met President Clerides and Foreign Minister Michaelides

(b) Ministerial visits to Cyprus for other purposes:

December 1992 – (Mr. Hugh Rossi, MP), Minister of State for Social Security and the Disabled met Mr. Papageorgliou, Minister for Labour and Social Insurance.

September 1983 – (Mrs. Peggy Fenner), Parliamentary Secretary, MAFF, met Mr. Andreou, Minister of Commerce.

September 1983 – (Mr. Richard Luce), Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, met Mr. Veniamin, the Acting Foreign Minister.

November 1983 – (Mr. Channon), United Kingdom Minister for Trade, met Mr. Andreou.

July 1984 – (Mr. Peter Brooke), Parliamentary Under-Secretary in the Department of Education and Science, attended Commonwealth Education Ministers Conference.

September 1989 – (Mr. David Mellor), Minister of State, Department of Health, attended Conference of European Ministers responsible for Family Affairs.

October 1990 – (Baroness Hooper), Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, attended Conference of European Health Ministers.

May 1993 – The Lord Chancellor, (Lord Mackay of Clashfern), attended Commonwealth Law Conference.

September 1993 – (Lady Chalker), Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and Minister for Overseas Development, attended Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Conference.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he expects to put in the British submissions to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons;

(2) what representations he has received and what consultations he has held on the British submissions to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons;

(3) whether his submissions to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons will be published or placed in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 547.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have participated in the EU discussions within the framework of working groups on a common European foreign policy in respect of the application by the World Health Organisation to the International Court of Justice on nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: They have.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his submissions to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons will embrace the question of threat to use as well as possession and use.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The request is for an opinion on whether the use of nuclear weapons by a state in war or other armed conflict would be lawful, and that question is addressed by our submission.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to other EU Governments about an EU submission to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons, on concerting individual Government submissions or on a common EU position on the issue.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 547. In drafting our submission, we have had consultations with Government Departments, allies, and some European partners.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will be seeking parliamentary approval for the British Government's submission to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Our submission to the International Court of Justice will be approved by relevant Ministers.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the admissibility of the World Health Organisation submission to the International Court of Justice on the legality of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As we made clear during the debate at the World Health Assembly in 1993, we do not consider that the question of the legality of nuclear weapons is within the competence of the World Health Organisation. We have great respect for the valuable work that the World Health Organisation has conducted in the health field. The legality of nuclear weapons, however, is an entirely different matter.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of Intergovernmental Authority on Drought and Development talks on Sudan which concluded in Nairobi on 17 May; and what are the prospects for further peace talks.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 17 May the Government of Sudan and Sudan People's Liberation Army factions signed an agreement on the opening of specific air destinations and surface corridors to humanitarian relief supplies. The next round of talks is scheduled for mid-July.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Courts (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out for each year since 1990 (a) the total amount of spending incurred in respect of the administration of the courts in Wales and (b) the total number of staff employed by the courts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The table sets out the total amount of spending incurred since 1990 in respect of the administration of the magistrates courts in Wales, and the Crown county courts on the Wales and Chester circuit which includes areas in Cheshire. Figures for 1993-94 have not yet been finalised.

Year	£ million
1990-91	32·974
1991-92	39·896
1992-93	46·695

The table sets out the total number of permanent staff employed in the magistrates courts in Wales and in the Crown and county courts in the Wales and Chester circuit on 31 December of each year.

Year	Number
1990	1,270·0
1991	1,297·5
1992	1,269·5
1993	1,277·5

Solicitors' Firms (Franchises)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will publish the number of solicitors' firms which have so far applied to the Legal Aid Board for a franchise.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Some 933 firms of solicitors have applied to the Legal Aid Board for a franchise in one or more franchised categories of work. This represents a total of 1,512 offices which have made such an application.

EMPLOYMENT

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on freedom of information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of delay in publication of the guidance.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Internal guidance notes on the operation of the code of practice in the Employment Department and in the Employment Service have been available for some time; the Health and Safety Executive's internal guidance will be available shortly; the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service relies on the central guidance on interpretation of the code of practice. Copies of internal guidance notes are being placed in the Library.

Fire Safety

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evaluation he has made of the Fire Brigades Union report entitled, "Cutting the Lifeline", on the implications for fire safety of the proposals under consideration by his security task force, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The review team has considered all submissions made to it as part of the inter-departmental review on enforcement of fire safety legislation. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State awaits the review team's report.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many chairs of industrial tribunals are currently employed; and at what total cost per annum.

Miss Widdecombe: Chairmen of industrial tribunals may be either full time—that is, salaried—or part time —paid on a sessional basis. The numbers of chairmen in post at 31 March and the estimated costs for the 12 months up to that date were as follows:

	Full-time chairmen	Part-time chairmen
Numbers	84	199
Cost	£4,961,076	£2,122,531

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment from which organisations the lay members of industrial tribunals are selected.

Miss Widdecombe: In accordance with the legislation governing the industrial tribunals, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State appoints the lay members after consultation with a number of bodies representing employers and employees. In the last appointment round the following organisations were consulted:

Employer Bodies:
Association of British Chambers of Commerce
Confederation of British Industry
Convention of Scottish Local Authorities
Department of Health (in respect of NHS Management)
Federation of Small Businesses
Institute of Directors
Local Government Management Board
National Chamber of Trade
British Retail Consortium
Employee Bodies:
Council of Managerial and Professional Staffs
Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunication and Plumbing Union
Federation of Managerial, Professional and General Associations
Royal College of Midwives
Royal College of Nursing
Trades Union Congress
Union of Democratic Mineworkers

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of time for which industrial tribunal hearing rooms are occupied each day.

Miss Widdecombe: The average length of a sitting day for the industrial tribunals, England and Wales, for the 12 months ended 31 March was 3·83 hours. To this must be added around half an hour preparing for the hearing and discussing the decision. These figures take no account of time spent on related interlocutory work and drafting and checking the tribunal's decision. I regret that figures are not available for the industrial tribunals, Scotland.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the chairs of industrial tribunals are (a) women and (b) from the ethnic minorities.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures are as follows:

Per cent.

	Full-time chairmen	Part-time chairmen
Women	14·3	6·8
Ethnic minorities	3·6	1·6

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what sums are required from applicants to industrial tribunals by way of a deposit; and in what circumstances any such deposit will not be returned.

Miss Widdecombe: Applicants, or respondents, may be ordered to pay a deposit of up to £150 as a condition of proceeding with their case where at a pre-hearing review the industrial tribunal considers that they have no reasonable prospect of success. The deposit is only forfeited, in full or in part, if parties lose their case at full hearing and have costs awarded against them. In that case the deposit goes towards payment of the costs.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average daily, weekly, monthly or annual fee of a chairperson of an industrial tribunal.

Miss Widdecombe: The figures as at 31 March are as follows:

Regional chairmen (annual salary)	65,912
Full-time chairmen (annual salary)	54,035
Part-time chairmen (daily fee)	246

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many adult males were employed in the United Kingdom in (a) 1964 and (b) 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: In June 1964 there were 16,488,000 males in the work force in employment in the United Kingdom, compared to 13,718,000 in June 1993. Over the same period, female numbers rose from 8,444,000 to 11,520,000.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many married women were employed in the United Kingdom in (a) 1964 and (b) 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: The estimate for spring 1993 from the labour force survey for the United Kingdom is that 8·4 million married women were in employment.

There are no equivalent LFS estimates before 1979, but the census of population held in 1966 shows 5 million married women in employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men between the ages of 18 and 45 years were unemployed in 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: In the United Kingdom, in 1993, the average level of claimant unemployment, unadjusted for seasonal effects, stood at 1,700,561 among men aged between 18 and 44—the closest available age group.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the London boroughs of Southwark, Lambeth, Lewisham and Tower Hamlets between the ages of 18 and 25 years are in (a) further education, (b) Government employment training schemes and (c) currently unemployed.

Miss Widdecombe: The available information for individual boroughs, which does not cover participants in Government training schemes, is given in the table:

	Southwark	Lambeth	Lewisham	Tower Hamlets
Claimant unemployed 18-24 year olds (April 1994)	5,395	6,046	4,943	4,277
Further Education students aged 18-25 years domiciled within each borough[1] (academic year 1992-93)
Full-time and Sandwich	1,015	1,456	1,018	1,108
Part-time	1,526	2,282	1,677	1,451
Total	2,541	3,738	2,695	2,559

[1] Students may study in places other than where they are domiciled.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the London borough of Southwark have found employment in the last 12 months; and how many of these jobs were (a) full-time and (b) part-time or job share.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information held centrally relates only to the number of people placed into jobs by the Employment Service jobcentres and numbers of people leaving claimant unemployment.

Between April 1993 and April 1994 jobcentres covering the Southwark area placed 9,591 people into employment. Nineteen out of 20 of all the jobcentre vacancies filled in Southwark during this period were for full-time jobs and the remainder for part-time. It should be noted that, nationally, only about one quarter of all engagements are made through jobcentres. Figures are not available for job-share vacancies.

In the Southwark local authority area the unadjusted number of people leaving claimant unemployment between April 1993 and April 1994 was 24,198. Information is not routinely available on the destinations of claimants who leave unemployment. However, past survey evidence indicates that the majority of people who leave claimant unemployment go into jobs.

Psychometric Testing

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what use his Department makes of psychometric testing techniques; what plans he has to extend the use of psychometric testing techniques in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department's main use of psychometric tests is in the individual assessment of the capabilities of people with disabilities by placing, assessment and counselling teams. Where tests are used, performance then forms part of the basis for counselling and action planning to support people's efforts to find employment. Internally, the Department uses psychometric tests to a limited extent in its management development programmes.

Providers with whom the Department contracts to deliver services to unemployed people may choose to use psychometric tests. Guidance is made available through a regularly updated, "Review of Psychometric Tests for Assessment in Vocational Training"; this authorative publication was initiated by the Department and is now maintained by the British Psychological Society.

The Department has no plans to extend the use of psychometric tests as such, but will do so where they offer a cost-effective addition to the basis for decisions.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Where comments are sought in consultation exercises, it is already the Department's usual practice to make clear that they are sought on the understanding that they can be made publicly available unless respondents have requested that their remarks be treated as confidential.

North Yorkshire TEC

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the administration cost of the North Yorkshire training and enterprise council for 1993-94.

Miss Widdecombe: During the 1993-94 financial year, the North Yorkshire training and enterprise council received a management fee from the Employment Department of £1,460,995. The administrative costs of the TEC will be shown in its audited accounts which will be published shortly.

Training

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total expenditure on (a) employment training and (b) youth training in 1993 within the Greater London area; and how many (i) men and (ii) women were on such schemes.

Miss Widdecombe: Table 1 shows the total expenditure on training for work, which replaced employment training in 1993 and youth training in 1993 within the Greater London area. Information on the number of men and women on YT and TFW is not available in the format requested. Table 2, however, shows how many men and women started on these schemes throughout 1993.

Total expenditure 1993-94 contract year
(Provisional)

Youth Training	47,960,837
Youth Credits	9,958,616
Total Youth Training and Youth Credits	57,919,453
Training for Work	60,036,946

Notes:

1. The 1993-94 Contract Year is 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994.
2. The expenditure figure is provisional and may be revised. Training and Enterprise Councils have 4 accounting periods (an accounting period is 4 weeks) in which to bring to account expenditure relating to their 1993-94 contract.
3. From 29 March 1993 Training for Work replaced Employment Training, Employment Action and High Technology National Training. Training for Work offers people who are long term unemployed the opportunity to improve and update skills or learn new ones, or to do temporary work of benefit to the community.

Trainee starts during the 1993-94 contract year

	Male	Female
Youth Training	9,640	6,912
Youth Credits	3,781	2,778
Total Youth Training and Youth Credits	13,421	9,690
Training for Work	27,057	18,916

Note: Youth Credits is a system which gives school leavers an entitlement usually in the form of a voucher or 'smart-card' with a specific monetary value, to purchase vocational training from employers or training providers.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, (1) pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 50, about the destinations of youth trainees by training and enterprise council area, if he will update the table to cover the period July 1992 to June 1993;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 50, about qualifications obtained by employment training and training for work leavers, if he will update the table to cover the period July 1992 to June 1993;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 50, about the destination of employment training and training for work trainees, if he will update the table to cover the period July 1992 to June 1993;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 50, about the destination of youth trainees, if he will update the tables to cover the period July 1992 to June 1993;

(5) pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 50, about the destinations of employment training and training for work leavers in each training and enterprise council area, if he will update the table to cover the period July 1992 to June 1993;

(6) pursuant to his answer of 21 March, Official Report, column 50, about the qualifications obtained by employment training and training for work leavers in each training and enterprise council area, if he will update the table to cover the period July 1992 to June 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Modern Apprenticeship Scheme

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what wage rates trainees on the modern apprenticeship scheme will receive; and how long an apprenticeship will last.

Miss Widdecombe: Wage rates will be a matter between the employer and the young person, reflecting the employer's investment in the training and the expectation of the young person of improved wage rates later on. Modern apprenticeships are not time bound; there will be flexible arrangements for the time individuals need to become qualified, which could by three years or longer.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what industries and types of work are to be covered by the modern apprenticeship scheme as set out in the "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" White Paper; and what has been the change in the number of jobs in these areas since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: The modern apprenticeships initiative will make a major contribution to Britain's skill supply by providing young people with high quality training in technical, craft, supervisory and junior management occupations across a wide range of sectors. The intention is that from September 1995 the modern apprenticeship initiative will cover all sectors, but prototypes will run in the following sectors from September 1994: agriculture, business administration, chemicals, child-care, electrical installation, engineering manufacturing, engineering construction, information technology, marine engineering, Merchant Navy, polymers, retail, steel and travel service.

Information about changes in the number of jobs in these areas is not available in the form and for the period requested. The basis on which occupational information is collected was changed in 1989.

The table provides estimates of the numbers of people working in these occupations for spring 1993 and spring 1991, the earliest date for which comparable data are available:

Employees of working age in Great Britain

Occupation	1991	1993	Change+− (Thousands)	Change Percentage
Managers and Administrators	2,708,736	2,980,610	+272	+10·0
Associate professional and technical occupations	1,875,301	1,882,160	+7	+0·4
Craft and related occupations	2,758,326	2,278,945	−479	−17·4

Source: Labour Force Survey.

Should the hon. Member require information about the earlier period between 1979 and 1989, I will send it to him and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of (a) low pay and (b) job insecurity on skills levels in the areas covered by the modern apprenticeship scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: Lack of skills often leads to low-paid insecure jobs. By gaining high-quality, relevant skills, young people can improve their employment and earnings prospects. Modern apprenticeships and accelerated modern apprenticeships will help 70,000 young people a year to attain such skills.

Unrealistic pay levels for young people would result in reduced employment and poorer opportunities.

Health and Safety

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his oral statement of 24 May, Official Report, column 197, what is his estimate of the cost of implementing the recommendations contained in the Health and Safety Commission's "Review of Regulations" report.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Commission's "Review of Regulations" is intended to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the regulatory regime. Most of what needs to be done lies within the commission's existing remit, and builds on the approach that it has taken over the past 20 years. The commission has advised me that it will begin to implement its proposals and recommendations on the basis of its existing public expenditure provision; but the matter will be kept under review.

Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the total recurrent costs of employment in the private and public sectors are the estimates of £75 million and £20·4 million costs to private and public sector employers, respectively, given in the compliance cost assessment in respect of the Civil Rights (Disabled Persons) Bill.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the total costs of employment in the public and private sectors is not available.

Structural Unemployment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he considers to be the current level of structural unemployment in London; and what assessment he has made of the trend of changes in this level.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no generally recognised and commonly used definition of structural unemployment.

European Social Fund

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in negotiations with the European Union for the utilisation of Britain's allocation of money under the European social fund objective 3.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The European Commission opened formal negotiations on the United Kingdom objective 3 plan on 27 April. Subsequently, there have been two further negotiating meetings. The United Kingdom has consistently pressed for speedy progress and will continue to do so.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for what purposes he is using objective 3 money from the European social fund.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Great Britain plan for European social fund objective 3 in 1994-99 outlines the purposes for which the Government propose to use the money. A copy of this document is in the Library. The plan has not yet been agreed by the European Commission.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 428, for what reasons he decided not to use any of Britain's allocation of European social fund money for objective 4.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 25 January, Official Report, column 223.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Private Investigation Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 166, how much his Department has spent on private investigation services during the last two years; if he will list those companies which have been employed by his Department during this period; what safeguards his Department took to ensure that these agencies were members of the Association of British Investigators; and what guidelines are currently in operation within his Department as regards this matter.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In the last two years, the Employment Service has twice instructed solicitors to use private investigation services as detailed in the previous answer of 11 May 1994, Official Report, column 166. In the first case, the cost to the ES from the private solicitor was £75. In the second case, the ES has not yet been billed by the Treasury Solicitor; the cost is estimated to be £100.

In both cases the solicitors who engaged the investigation agencies were responsible for ensuring that they were reputable.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Lord President of the Council in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office does not normally issue public consultation documents. Any future exercise would be conducted in accordance with the code of practice on government information and any other relevant guidance.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Child Care

Mrs. Roche: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, how many representations the Commission has received regarding the need for a creche in the parliamentary estate.

Mr. Beith: In this Parliament the Member answering for the Commission and the Chairman of the Administration Committee have replied to 24 oral or written questions regarding the provision of child care. A further six questions to the Commission stand on the Order Paper for oral reply. In addition, 47 Members have so far added their names to early-day motion 862.

Legislation (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list each Bill presented to Parliament since 1964 which has proposed setting up an elected body for Wales, indicating the year of presentation, the proposer and the final stage at which it arrived.

Mr. Newton: The Scotland and Wales Bill introduced in 1974 was subsequently lost in the House of Commons in 1976.

The "Wales Bill" introduced in 1977, received Royal Assent on 31 July 1978 and was later repealed in 1979 following a referendum.

Information on private Bills and private Members' Bills can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Office of Gas Supply

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which Minister made the appointment of the Director General of Gas Supply; and if he will make a statement on the process involved in the appointment.

Mr. Heseltine: The appointment was made by me in accordance with section 1 of the Gas Act 1986. External executive search consultants were employed, and the post was advertised in the national press.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place a copy of the job specification for the Director General of Gas Supply in the Library.

Mr. Heseltine: I am arranging for a copy of the job specification given to the executive search consultants to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date the interviews for the appointment of the Director General of Gas Supply were made.

Mr. Heseltine: The ministerial interviews for the shortlisted candidates for the appointment of Director General of Gas Supply took place on 20 and 22 July and on 1 September 1993.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which company was used in the recruitment of the Director General of Gas Supply.

Mr. Heseltine: Saxton Bampfylde was appointed as the executive search consultants in connection with the appointment.

Oil and Gas

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the blocks on the United Kingdom continental shelf that have been licensed to oil companies, and have been identified as containing oil and gas reserves, have remained undeveloped for more than eight years since the blocks were first licensed; what are the combined estimated reserves of those blocks; and how many blocks lie off the coast of the north-west of England.

Mr. Eggar: Up until the end of 1985, there are a total of 106 significant discoveries in 87 blocks without development approval.

Of these 106 significant discoveries, 15—in 13 blocks—are presently under discussion for development.

The remaining 91 significant discoveries—in 77 blocks—contain estimated total gas reserves of 5,777 billion cubic feet, and oil and condensate reserves of 1,767 million barrels.

One discovery block of these 91 discoveries is in the north-west area of England.

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans the Government have to encourage oil companies to bring forward their development plans to maintain the level of United Kingdom engineering expertise.

Mr. Eggar: I have frequent discussions with the oil industry to see whether there are any fiscal measures that can be introduced which will encourage development.

In addition to this, my officials review with the companies on a regular basis their programmes for future developments. Where they identify discoveries with no foreseeable development, the companies are encouraged to offer them, by sale or swap, to other companies.

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade under what circumstances blocks that have been licensed to oil companies can be confiscated on the grounds that they have not been developed; and what is the maximum period a block can be left unexplored or undeveloped before the Government will take action.

Mr. Eggar: Under the current regulations that govern licences in seaward areas, licensees are required to submit a development plan within a period of 18 years if the licence period is to be extended. If there is any breach or non-observance by the licensees of any terms and conditions of the licence, including exploration and drilling commitments, the Secretary of State may revoke the licence.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those blocks which he considers should never be licensed for oil exploration because of their environmental sensitivity.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 26 May 1994]: I attach great importance to environmental considerations in the exploration for our oil and gas reserves, and will continue to do so. Knowledge of environmental sensitivities is developing over time, as are the methods of addressing them and the techniques used in exploration. I will, of course, continue to discuss the offer of blocks with environmental organisations—including the Joint Nature Conservation Committee—and will take their views into account when deciding which blocks can be licensed.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the allocation of blocks to companies for oil and gas in the Irish sea; and what environmental restrictions have been put on these companies.

Mr. Eggar: The following operating companies hold licences to explore for oil and gas in the Irish Sea and develop any finds:

Amoco
113/29, 113/30

Arco
107/21

British Gas Exploration and Production
110/2A, 110/2B, 110/3A, 110/8A, 110/9A, 110/15, 111/3, 111/4, 111/8, 110/10, 111/15, 113/26A, 113/27A

Chevron
103/3, 106/28, 106/29, 110/18

Clyde
113/28

Conoco
110/5, 110/11A

Deminex
109/15

Elf Enterprise Caledonia
108/29, 108/30, 111/25, 111/29, 111/30

Where necessary, appropriate conditions have been attached to licences to protect any environmental sensitivities which have been identified. A copy of each of the environmental protection conditions which were attached to licences awarded in the 14th round of licensing has been placed in the Library of the House.

Engineers

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans the Government have developed to promote the involvement of professionally qualified engineers in the design, construction, operation and management of engineering projects and processes.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government made it clear in the White Paper on competitiveness—Cm. 2563—that adopting best practice and improving management skills in engineering is important and that United Kingdom firms should utilise and reward engineering skills at all levels. It is, however, ultimately up to employers to decide how they best involve engineers in their businesses.

Objective 1 Projects

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to issue details of the rules and regulations governing the role of the private sector in objective 1 projects; when he expects that discussions with the European Commission concerning additionality will be resolved; what progress is being made in expediting the Merseyside objective 1 programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Negotiations with the European Commission on the Merseyside objective 1 single programming document are nearing their conclusion.

There is already guidance on the role of the private sector in structural funds projects. This is currently under review by United Kingdom Government Departments and the European Commission.

AEA Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 27 April, Official Report, column 166, how many staff from the Warren Springs Laboratory transferred to AEA Technology on 1 April; and what were the redundancy costs of those staff that did not transfer.

Mr. Heseltine: Eighty-five Warren Spring Laboratory staff were transferred to AEA Technology. Some staff who did not transfer have taken posts elsewhere in the civil service. There have been no compulsory redundancies. It will take some time before the full costs of staff severance are known but they are expected to be less than £5 million.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list for each of the last five years, the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department is unable to provide the information requested other than at disproportionate cost.

Jordan

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the total value of United Kingdom exports to Jordan, and also the value of each of the broad category titles of the standard international trade classification for (a) 1971 to 1980 and (b) 1981 to 1990.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is provided in the following table:

Value of United Kingdom Exports to Jordan
(£ million, Current Prices)

Section Description	1971-80	1981-90
0 Food and live animals	23·9	67·8
1 Beverages and tobacco	7·1	22·3
2 Crude materials, inedible, except fuels	2·0	6·4
3 Mineral fuels, lubricants, and related materials	3·7	12·7
4 Animal and vegetable oils, fats and waxes	0·7	1·8
5 Chemicals and related products, not elsewhere specified	46·2	145·3
6 Manufactured goods classified chiefly by material	88·0	204·4
7 Machinery and transport equipment	207·6	621·9
8 Miscellaneous manufactured articles	49·5	167·4
9 Commodities and transactions not classified elsewhere	18·5	581·5
TOTAL	447·1	1,831·3

Source: Overseas trade statistics of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether Exports Credit Guarantee Department support was offered to the Kingdom of Jordan or any contractors supplying the Kingdom in connection with, or as a result of, the memorandum of undertaking signed on 28 November 1979.

Mr. Heseltine: Yes.

Export Licences

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether exported material requiring an export licence, and later returned to the United Kingdom for repair or modification, requires a fresh export licence; and if he will place in the Library copies of the guidance that exists on this point.

Mr. Heseltine: Goods subject to United Kingdom export control at the time they are re-exported in the circumstances described require the authorisation of an export licence. Many such exports are authorised under open general export licences. Copies of the relevant licences have been placed in the Library of the House.

Where goods were initially exported under the authority of an individual licence, they may normally be re-exported under the terms of the original licence.

Private Members' Bills

Ms Lynne: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasions since April 1992 Ministers from his Department have (a) requested parliamentary counsel to assist in preparing amendments to private Members' Bills on behalf of other private Members and (b) authorised officials to instruct parliamentary counsel to prepare amendments which were subsequently passed to private Members.

Mr. Heseltine: Parliamentary counsel drafts not on behalf of private Members but on the instructions of Departments acting on the authority of Ministers.

On no occasions since April 1992 have amendments been drafted by parliamentary counsel on instructions from DTI and subsequently passed to private Members.

Post Office

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that postal deliveries to very rural areas will be safeguarded if the proposed privatisation of the Post Office is implemented.

Mr. McLoughlin: Yes. We have repeatedly made clear that the universal service to every address in the country, at a uniform tariff, is non-negotiable.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to safeguard two daily mail deliveries if the Post Office is privatised.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of deliveries a day is currently an operational issue for the Post Office. There are significant parts of the country where there is only one daily delivery. Regulatory arrangements in the event of a change in the status of the Royal Mail will be covered in the forthcoming Green Paper.

Pensions and Life Insurance

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from companies operating in the pension and life industry advocating direct Government regulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Under the Insurance Companies Act 1982, the Secretary of State has direct responsibility for the regulation of all United Kingdom authorised insurance companies. The industry seeks no change from the present arrangements.

Military Exhibitions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what United Kingdom firms have been supported by his Department to attend any military, security or police exhibition (a) within the United Kingdom or (b) overseas since 1979; and if he will detail the nature of the support and the number of companies which attended each event.

Mr. Heseltine: The Department of Trade and Industry does not provide support for United Kingdom firms to attend exhibitions within the United Kingdom.

The Department does provide support for United Kingdom firms to attend overseas exhibitions in the form of a subvention towards the cost of participation. Relevant information for the period before 1 April 1988 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For the period after that date, support for firms attending military, security or police exhibitions has been provided as follows:

Financial year	Number of events	Number of firms
1988-89	4	70
1989-90	4	114
1990-91	7	131
1991-92	10	151
1992-93	12	266
1993-94	9	95

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on freedom of information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publication of the guidance.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has not produced its own guidance on interpretation of the open government code of practice. We rely on the central guidance which has already been placed in the Library of the House.

Guidance on procedures for operating the code within my Department has, however, been available for some time. I am sending the hon. Member a copy and also placing copies in the Library of the House.

Electrified Fencing

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many export licences have been granted for past and on-going exports of electrified fencing and barrier products designed to deliver electric shocks to people;

(2) what licensing requirements apply to the export of electrified fencing and barrier products designed to deliver electric shocks to people.

Mr. Heseltine: Electrified fencing and barriers are not in themselves licensable under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994. Portable anti-riot devices for administering an electric shock or an incapacitating substance, and riot control vehicles electrified to repel boarders are controlled under the legislation. Details of the number of export licences approved for these controlled items could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Energy Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on matters discussed and decisions taken, including details of any matters on which votes were taken, at the Energy Council in Brussels on 25 May.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Council considered several issues and received reports from the Commission on matters of interest. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached unanimous political agreement on guidelines for energy trans-European networks. It was agreed that a formal common position, including a decision on a list of projects of common interest, should, if possible, be taken at the next Energy Council. This would allow enough time for the projects to be considered individually and for the opinion of the European Parliament to be taken into account.

The Commission reported to the Council on progress on the European energy charter treaty. It was agreed that the Community should work for the treaty to be concluded later this month.

There was a discussion of the electricity liberalisation directive, and general endorsement of the need for further work on five key areas. These are: access to networks, public service obligations, a system for providing new capacity, unbundling of accounts and the role of the system operator.

There was a general discussion of the need for a Community energy policy. A Commission proposal for a Green Paper was welcomed. The importance of consulting widely within industry was supported by several member states. The Commission presented its proposal for Thermie II, which is concerned with support for near-market energy technology projects, their demonstration and dissemination of the results.

The Council adopted, unanimously, conclusions on two Commission communications. One was on energy and cohesion and the other on nuclear safety in eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. The hydrocarbon licensing directive, which had been agreed at the 10 December 1993 Energy Council, was adopted unanimously without discussion.

Apart from the "A" points which were agreed without discussion, no formal votes were taken by the Council.

System X

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many system X telecommunication systems have been exported since 1989; and to which countries.

Mr. McLoughlin: Exports of system X telecommunications systems have been made to the following countries: the United States of America, Russia, China, Colombia, Gibraltar, Kenya, India, Kuwait, the Falklands and the Philippines. Information on the number of systems exported is not publically available and is a matter for the companies concerned.

Competitiveness

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he made of the implications for environmental protection when he drew up the proposal contained in his report on competitiveness, Cm 2563.

Mr. McLoughlin: The United Kingdom sustainable development strategy—Cm 2426—published in January 1994, outlined the Government's proposals for ensuring that future economic development and environmental protection are fully compatible. The proposals in Cm 2563 are fully consistent with the principles set out in the strategy, and in particular take account of the Government's determination to seek the least burdensome and prescriptive means for achieving its environmental objectives.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes he plans in the loan guarantee scheme or similar assistance to small firms in the context of the publication of the competitiveness White Paper.

Mr. McLoughlin: The small firms loan guarantee scheme was changed significantly twice during 1993. There are no current plans to further amend to the scheme.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies of "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" have been printed; and what was the total cost of production and distribution.

Mr. Sainsbury: The White Paper on competitiveness was published by HMSO. A total of 10,500 copies were produced. The production costs are a matter for HMSO, and in accordance with normal practice were reflected in the price of the White Paper. In addition, the DTI met preliminary design, writing and typesetting costs of approximately £30,000.

The table sets out provisional costs, excluding staff time, incurred by a range of Departments in purchasing the White Paper for external distribution, and in producing summary versions and extracts. It also sets out the costs of external distribution of the White Paper, the summary versions and extracts.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Eggar: The Department requires staff to report job offers. However, there is no central record kept of such offers. Such information could be obtained, therefore, only at disproportionate cost.

Any firm job offer an individual wishes to take up is subject to the business appointment rules procedure.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about obstacles to the greater take-up of loans under the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: A number of representations and complaints are received about the unavailability of loans under the small firms loan guarantee scheme. The majority of these concern businesses whose proposals have been rejected by lenders on commercial grounds. With both public and lenders' funds at risk, scheme applications must be assessed carefully by lenders for their commercial viability.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the take-up of loans under the loan guarantee scheme over the past three years.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of loans guaranteed under the small firms loan guarantee scheme in each of the past three financial years was 1991-92, 2,933; 1992-93, 2,342; and 1993-94, 3,[illegible]. Take-up of the scheme increased considerably following the enhancements introduced on 1 July 1993 and current average monthly take-up is now higher than at any time since 1984.

Coal Industry

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those organisations which have submitted applications to pre-qualify for the purchase of British Coal mining activities in respect of each regional coal company and for each care and maintenance colliery.

Mr. Eggar: No. The identities of the parties which have submitted pre-qualification applications are commercially confidential.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many management and employee buy-out teams have applied for financial assistance during the sale of British Coal to prepare bids for purchase of (a) all five regional coal companies, (b) each regional coal company, (c) each care and maintenance colliery and (d) each British Coal non-mining business.

Mr. Eggar: A number of MEBO teams have applied to the Department for financial assistance when preparing bids for (a) to (c) above and several offers have been made. However, details of these applications are commercially confidential. British Coal operates a similar scheme for MEBOs bidding for their non-mining businesses on which general offers will be invited and details of these applications are also commercially confidential.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each company which has pre-registered an interest in buying any of the five regional packages of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: No. The identities of the parties who have submitted pre-qualification applications are commercially confidential.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many individual companies have pre-registered an interest in buying (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four or (e) five regional packages of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: The detail of pre-qualification applications is commercially confidential.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each company which has registered an interest to buy (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four or (e) five regional packages of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: No. The identities of the parties which have submitted pre-qualification applications are commercially confidential.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many companies have pre-registered an interest in buying any of the five regional packages of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: We have received 34 applications to pre-qualify for the sale of the five regional coal companies and the care and maintenance collieries.

Public Houses

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to encourage the prosperity of British public houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Government have taken a wide range of measures to improve the commercial framework in which all firms, including public houses, operate. A number of these were described in the White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win"—Cm 2563.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations his Department is undertaking into the issues raised by publicans in the lobby of Parliament on 11 May about upward-only rent clauses, the public house tie, and the enforcement of the beer orders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am fully aware of the principal issues raised by licensees at the recent lobby and shall be meeting a number of publicans soon to discuss these further.

The beer supply tie is a contractual arrangement which has existed for many years, and I have no plans at present to take any action in this area. The United Kingdom will of course participate fully in any review of EC regulation 1984-83, the beer block exemption, when this is carried out.

Enforcement of the beer orders is the responsibility of the Director General of Fair Trading, and his staff continue to monitor compliance. Any complaints received are carefully examined for evidence of any breaches of the orders.

As a landlord and tenant matter, upward-only rent reviews are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Deregulation

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's deregulation initiative.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A booklet "Deregulation—Cutting Red Tape"—copies of which are available in the Library of the House—was published in January setting out the aims and achievements of the deregulation initiative to date. Since then further developments have included:

The completion of the departmental reviews of their regulations. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has recently submitted a report to the Prime Minister on the results of this.

There are now 873 regulations earmarked for amendment or repeal, and 359 of the task forces' 605 recommendations have now been accepted and work is being taken forward by the new task force under the chairmanship of Francis Maude.

The Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill has now completed its passage through the Commons and is currently before another place.

The review of fire safety regulations has now submitted its report to the Government. We are considering its recommendations and how to proceed regarding publication.

We continue to work with the European Commission and other member states to ensure that deregulation is at the heart of European policy making and that all new EC proposals are fully justified in terms of their costs and benefits.

Exports, Cyprus

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing for Cyprus the exports for each year since 1980 from the United Kingdom classified under section 9 of the standard international trade classifications.

Mr. Heseltine: The information is provided in the table:

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ensure that the Government ratify the chemical weapons convention by the time it is scheduled to enter into force.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government are committed to ratifying the chemical weapons convention and will introduce the necessary implementing legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 75, to which organisations outside Government a full copy of the Stoy Hayward report on insolvency was sent.

Mr. Heseltine: No organisations outside Government have been sent a full copy of the Stoy Hayward report.

Public Utilities

Mr. Hanson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many disabled people were connected to (a) gas, (b) electricity and (c) telephone in 1993-94;

(2) how many women over 60 years and men over 65 years were connected to (a) gas, (b) electricity and (c) telephone in 1993-94.

Mr. Eggar: These are matters for the boards of British Gas, British Telecom and the regional electricity companies.

Fire Safety

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects to receive the report of the scrutiny team concerned with fire safety;

(2) if he will publish the report of the fire safety scrutiny team;

(3) what undertakings Ministers have given that no changes will be made in fire safety arrangements based upon the conclusions of the scrutiny team unless there was full consultation with the fire authorities; and if he will inform those authorities of the conclusions.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The fire safety review team have completed its work and its report has been submitted to the Government. Ministers are now considering the report and the question of its publication. No decisions have been taken but the Government have made it consistently clear that they are committed to full consultation with interested parties before any changes in the existing arrangements are made.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Heseltine: The code of practice on government information commits the Department to publishing relevant facts and analysis underlying major policy proposals. This would include details of any public consultation exercise. Comments on public consultation documents are sought on the basis that the Department would not want to publish individual responses against the wishes of those providing them.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions reprocessing at THORP has been (a) interrupted and (b) interfered with since it started shearing spent nuclear fuel earlier this year.

Mr. Eggar: This is a management matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evaluation he has made of the implications for the projected profitability of THORP of the report by the Japanese Government's Advisory Committee for Energy calling for a significant slow-down in the industrial re-use of plutonium returned from the reprocessing plants at Sellafield.

Mr. Eggar: This is a commercial matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Privatisation

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 604, if he will provide such information as is available on the cost of employing consultants in connection with privatisation programmes.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 13 May 1994]: The Comptroller and Auditor General frequently reports on privatisations under section 9 of the National Audit Act 1993 and in doing so generally includes information on the costs of advisers—which may include consultants, legal, financial and other advisers. Since 1993, the following figures have appeared in such reports relating to privatisations undertaken by the DTI and the former Department of Energy:

Reference and subject		Costs of advisers £ million
1993-94
HC59	The Sale of the British Technology Group	[1]2·80

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Worthington: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the volume of investment in manufacturing industry in real and constant price terms in each year since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

Estimates of manufacturing investment at current and constant prices may be obtained from the Control Statistical Office database accessible through the House of Commons Library.

Cetaceans (Disturbance)

Mr Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) when he expects guidelines on acoustic disturbance of cetaceans during seismic exploration activity to come into force;

(2) when he will publish draft guidelines on acoustic disturbance of cetaceans during seismic exploration activity;

(3) which non-governmental organisations he intends to consult on draft guidelines on acoustic disturbance of cetaceans during seismic exploration activity; and when he intends to consult them.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 26 May 1994]: I have been asked to reply.

The non-governmental groups to be consulted on draft guidelines include Wildlife and Countryside Link—cetacean group—which represents 10 voluntary groups; the Wildlife and Countryside Link groups for Scotland and Wales; the Whale and Dolphin Conservation Society; Greenpeace; World Wide Fund for Nature and the Friends of Cardigan Bay. I hope to issue a draft shortly and will then need to take account of any comments before publishing the guidelines in final form. They will become fully operational at that point.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many charters have been reissued imposing higher standards and targets; and if he will give details of the higher standards and targets in each case.

Mr. David Davis: The following charters have been revised and give details of improved standards of service.

The Benefits Agency Customer Charter now gives standards for the clearance times of all benefits rather than just the main benefits; a standard of 10 minutes for waiting to be seen by a receptionist or no more than 30 minutes when very busy; and a standard of 10 working days for responding to correspondence.

The Contributions Agency employers charter now gives standards for customer satisfaction of 80 per cent., up from 75 per cent; a standard of 10 minutes for waiting to see a receptionist or no more than 30 minutes when very busy; a standard of 10 working days for responding to correspondence; a standard to respond to a request for a visit within one week and to carry out the visit within two weeks; and a standard that office appointments will be arranged within two weeks of being requested.

The London Underground Ltd. customer charter now gives higher operational standards for trains in customer service—from 97·5 per cent. to 98 per cent.; for escalators in customer service—from 87 per cent. to 89 per cent.; and for lifts in customer service—from 85 per cent. to 92 per cent. It also gives higher customer satisfaction standards for providing information on trains—from 78 per cent. to 86 per cent.; for providing information on stations—from 76 per cent. to 81 per cent.; for staff helpfulness and availability—from 83 per cent. to 86 per cent.; for train cleanliness—from 76 per cent. to 81 per cent.; and for station cleanliness—from 85 per cent. to 89 per cent.

Other charters due to be revised this year include the parents charter, the job seekers charter, the contributors charter, and the patients charter for Wales. In addition, the courts charter is due to be revised in early 1995.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much compensation was paid (a) under previous compensation arrangements during each of the five financial years before the adoption of the citizens charter provisions and (b) under the provisions of the citizens charter (i) in total and (ii) by relevant Department and agency.

Mr. David Davis: Details of the amount of compensation paid under the provisions of the citizens charter and under previous compensation arrangements before its adoption are not held centrally. However, at 21 January 1994, it was estimated that £9,383,000 had been paid out in compensation under the provisions of the citizens charter. This does not, however, include compensation paid by privatised utilities or local authorities for failure to meet service standards, as details are not held centrally. This figure is broken down in the table shown.

In addition, in the financial year 1992-93, the Inland Revenue paid £389,000 in compensation for "serious error" as defined in the code of practice "Mistakes by the Inland Revenue"; and HM Customs and Excise paid £532,000 in repayment supplements between January 1992 and 31 December 1993.

Department	Compensation paid (nearest £000)	From	To
British Rail	4,427	April 1992	30 November 1993
London Underground	184	August 1992	7 January 1994
Northern Ireland Railways	2	November 1992	19 January 1994
HM Customs and Excise	14	January 1992	31 December 1993
Benefits Agency	4,071	April 1992	March 1993
Contributions Agency[1]	76	April 1991	March 1993

Department	Compensation paid (nearest £000)	From	To
Employment Service	89	April 1992	March 1993
Department of Health and Social Services, Northern Ireland[1]	520	April 1991	20 January 1994

[1] These figures represent payments made from April 1991, four months before the Contributions Agency and Northern Ireland Social Security Agency charters were introduced.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) which public services have reduced the response time for dealing with complaints under the citizens charter; and if he will give details of the reduction in each case;

(2) how many complaints mechanisms for public service users contained in the citizens charter programme involve a lay element within that mechanism; and if he will give details;

(3) what form of redress or compensation is available to citizens when a public body stipulating a specific response time for complaints fails to respond within the time required;

(4) how many of the public services under the provisions of the citizens charter stipulate a response time for dealing with complaints; and what those response times are in each case;

(5) how many of the complaints mechanisms for public service users contained in the citizens charter programme now have an independent element; and if he will list them.

Mr. David Davis: Each public service organisation is responsible for the delivery of citizens charter standards to its own particular customers, and for ensuring an appropriate response if the standard is not met.

Details of the procedures and mechanisms in place within each individual organisation are not held centrally. However, the Government recognise the importance of all public services, including Government Departments, having effective complaints procedures. In June 1993, Ministers set up the citizens charter complaints task force, with a specific remit to look at how public services deal with complaints and to ensure that their procedures operate in line with citizens charter principles. The complaints task force is chaired by Lady Wilcox, chairman of the National Consumer Council, and its members draw upon considerable expertise from both the public and private sectors.

The task force published in October 1993 a booklet "Effective Complaints Systems: Principles and Checklist", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. This sets out good practice in complaints handling, and it has been widely disseminated to public services. It states that people should be told when they can expect a response; be kept informed of progress; and given an explanation if deadlines are not met. It also states that complaints procedures should include independent review within the organisation where appropriate—review by someone within the organisation but separate from the direct line management of the person or section complained about; the Inland Revenue complaints adjudicator is an example of this.

The task force's programme of reviews of complaints systems in individual public services is now well under way. The task force also plans to issue over the next few months a series of discussion documents on various aspects of complaints handling, including speed of response and independence of investigation. The findings from its reviews, and feedback from the discussion papers, will form the basis of its final report to Ministers in spring 1995.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the initiatives to date under the citizens charter programme to develop user consultation, representation and participation in public services.

Mr. David Davis: The citizens charter encourages all public service organisations to develop user consultation, representation and participation in the services they provide to their customers.

The citizens charter unit does not hold records of the initiatives undertaken by individual public service organisations. However, a number of initiatives have been taken centrally. In August 1993, the unit published the results of its own customer survey which showed that seven out of 10 people were aware of the citizens charter and that there was strong support for the aims of the charter. In addition, Lady Wilcox, chairman of the citizens charter complaints task force, has invited people to write to her with their experiences of how their complaints have been handled, to provide the task force with first hand information from users of public services. The task force has also recently commissioned research into what service users think of public service complaints systems.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Departments and agencies had extra-statutory compensation arrangements before the adoption of citizens charter provisions.

Dr. David Davis: Details of the statutory compensation arrangements in place before the adoption of the citizens charter provisions are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing his departmental guidance.

Mr. Waldegrave: In addition to the general guidance on implementation of the code of practice, which was produced by the Office of Public Service and Science for use throughout Government, specific guidance was prepared for use within my departments—OPSS, the Central Office of Information and Her Majesty's Stationery Office. Staff in the Prime Minister's Office have received the same material. Both documents have been publicly available since early April, and copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Chartermarks

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which organisations previously awarded chartermarks have had a chartermark taken away from them for failure to uphold standards and deliver a service in accordance with charter principles.

Mr. David Davis: No organisations have had their chartermarks taken away, although the citizens charter unit reserves the right to take away a chartermark from an organisation whose performance subsequently falls significantly below standard.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the operation of a clear and effective complaints procedure with an independent element is one of the criteria taken into consideration in awarding a chartermark.

Mr. David Davis: Yes.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance he has given to civil servants on the application of rules governing political activity to campaigning against privatisation of the Post Office.

Mr. Waldegrave: The principles and rules on civil servants' political activities are set out in chapter 4.4 of the personnel management section of the civil service management code. A copy is in the Library. No specific central guidance has been issued on privatisation of the Post Office.

DNA Bank

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evaluation he has made of the suitability of the Westlakes Research Institute at Whitehaven as host for the first European DNA bank.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Westlakes Research Institute is proposing to undertake a study in conjunction with Newcastle university on the links between genetic make-up and disease. The question of a European DNA databank does not arise.

Necrotising Fasciitis

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what research has been done by the Medical Research Council to find a vaccine for necrotising fasciitis; what were the dates on which each project (a) began and (b) ended; and what were the considerations which led to the ending of each project.

Mr. Waldegrave: Although no work has been funded specifically for the development of a vaccine for necrotising fasciitis, basic research has been, and continues to be, funded by the Medical Research Council which could underpin the development of a vaccine.

The MRC microbial pathogenicity research group—which was part of the council's clinical research centre, Harrow and has since moved to Nottingham—carried out a study into necrotising fasciitis as part of its programme of research. This study was carried out between 1982 and 1987. The results were published in scientific journals in 1987 and 1988.

The council continues to support major programmes in bacterial infection including those being carried out at a new Centre for Bacterial Infection and Immunity in Nottingham. This centre, which will cost £2·6 million over the next five years, was opened on 11 May 1994. The MRC is always willing to consider for support soundly based scientific proposals in competition with other applications.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is usual practice for consultation documents issued by the Office of Public Service and Science to state that responses received may be made publicly available unless respondents request that their remarks be treated as confidential.

Maritime Markets

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those advisers and areas where the technology foresight programme is looking at maritime markets.

Mr. Waldegrave: Maritime markets will be included in several areas of the technology foresight programme including, for example, agriculture, natural resources and environment; energy; food and drink; and transport. A wide range of individuals and organisations will be consulted during the foresight programme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Private Members' Bills

Ms Lynne: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what occasions since April 1992 Ministers from her Department have (a) requested parliamentary counsel to assist in preparing amendments to private Members' Bills on behalf of other private Members and (b) authorised officials to instruct parliamentary counsel to prepare amendments which were subsequently passed to private Members.

Mr. Jack: Parliamentary counsel drafts not on behalf of private Members but on the instructions of Departments acting on the authority of Ministers. In any event, no amendments have been drafted by parliamentary counsel on instructions from this Department and subsequently passed to private Members in respect of any private Members' Bills since April 1992.

Sheep Farmers

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she will provide additional quotas to newly established sheep farmers who had small quotas in their first year.

Mr. Jack: Newly established sheep farmers, depending on their circumstances, are able to claim quota under the following arrangements if they:

Claimed premium for the first time in 1992, they will already have been allocated quota under special arrangements;

Claimed premium for the first time in 1993, they were able to apply to the 1993 reserve, and we are currently considering their applications;

Are newcomers to farming or first-time claimants in 1994 or subsequent years, they may apply to the 1994 or subsequent year's national reserve.

Sheep Slaughtering, Spain

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to her answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 558, what reply she has received from the Spanish Agriculture Minister; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We have been assured that the slaughterhouses concerned have been inspected and that the Spanish authorities are ensuring that they comply with Royal Decree 1614/87, regarding the stunning of animals prior to their slaughter.

Drinking Water

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration the Government have given to the representations made by farmers and landowners concerning the European Commission's nitrate directive regarding the limit of nitrate per litre of drinking water; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The main concern of farmers and landowners is that any nitrate limit should be based on the best and most up-to-date scientific and medical advice available. We share that concern and have urged the Commission to take it fully into account in its current review of the drinking water directive (80/778/EEC). Separately we published a consultation paper on 18 May inviting farmers, landowners and others to comment on our proposals to designate vulnerable zones under the nitrate directive (91/676/EEC).

Animal Exports

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live animals exported for slaughter from the United Kingdom are then returned to Britain for sale.

Mr. Soames: This information is not available.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will set out the legislation applicable to the further fattening of animals, the procedures followed and the point at which live animals exported are reclassified as being the responsibility of another country;

(2) how the Government interpret the term "further fattening" of live animals for food.

Mr. Soames: The welfare of all livestock kept on agricultural land, whether for fattening or for other farming purposes, is protected by the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968 and by regulations and codes of practice made under that Act. The prevention of cruelty to animals, including farm livestock, is also covered by the Protection of Animals Acts 1911 to 1988.

Provisions of the Animal Health Act 1981 and orders made under it protect the welfare of animals during transport and at markets. This legislation does not distinguish between animals for further fattening and other categories, although the term "further fattening" is normally understood to refer to animals which are intended for food production but are not for immediate slaughter.

The Animal Health Act, either directly or by orders made under it, also requires the notification of certain animal diseases and contains measures to control or prevent the spread of disease.

It is the responsibility of each member state to enforce Community and national legislation within its territory and to co-operate with other member states in the exchange of information which will assist enforcement of Community law.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans she has to introduce restrictions of journey times for animals for slaughter;

(2) what plans she has to reduce the number of hours of the transportation of live animals.

Mr. Soames: The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 places a limit of 15 hours on the transport of farm livestock without the provision of food or water. The introduction of new controls on animal transport will depend on the outcome of European Community negotiations.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to seek to amend the treaty of Rome to recognise the status of animals as sentient beings.

Mr. Soames: Amendments to the treaty are a matter for intergovernmental conferences of the EU member states. Following the last such IGC, a declaration was agreed at Maastricht on the need for the Community to take full account of the welfare of farm animals when drawing up legislation. This followed a United Kingdom initiative and is a very positive step forward.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to introduce special licensing of vehicles and drivers engaged in the transportation of animals.

Mr. Soames: Transporters of livestock must comply with welfare provisions made under the Animal Health Act 1981. The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992 requres any person having control of an animal transport undertaking to ensure that animals are entrusted only to persons possessing the knowledge necessary to administer appropriate care to the animals in transport. The need for any further measures will be kept under review in the light of European Community developments.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the responsibilities of her Ministry concerning the quotas for the export or import and slaughter of farm animals.

Mr. Soames: In the sheep, beef and pig sectors there are no quotas for the export from the United Kingdom of live animals either for slaughter or for breeding. Quotas for imports of live sheep, cattle and pigs—and sheepmeat, beef and pigmeat—from third countries to the European Union are set for the EU as a whole and are administered in each member state by designated agencies. There are no specific import quotas for the United Kingdom.

For the slaughter of farm animals in the United Kingdom there are no quotas, but there is a restriction on the weekly throughput of small abattoirs, for hygiene purposes. Ministers negotiated into the EC directive governing the production of red meat less onerous structural requirements for low-throughput abattoirs which can achieve the necessary hygiene standards by handling one animal at a time. At the December 1992 Agriculture Council, my right hon. Friend the previous Secretary of State secured an increase in the throughput limit for such abattoirs from 12 livestock units to 20 livestock units per week, until 31 December 1994. The increase was welcomed as giving considerable flexibility to smaller businesses. The Commission is due to review the effect of the directive on small businesses and Ministers will press for the increased low-throughput limits to be made permanent.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment her Department has made of the export of meat carcases as a viable and achievable alternative to the transport of live animals abroad for slaughter.

Mr. Soames: United Kingdom exports of meat, the value of which is considerably greater than that of exports of live animals for food, provide an important contribution to the British economy. The movement of animals is a matter for commercial judgment subject to animal welfare and health safeguards.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to give greater powers to animal welfare and health inspectors concerned with the transport or slaughter of animals.

Mr. Soames: The appropriate inspectors already have wide powers under the Animal Health Act 1981, the Slaughterhouses Act 1974 and the Slaughter of Poultry Act 1967.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if she will list by category the number of live animals exported from the United Kingdom in each year since 1979;

(2) if he will list by category the numbers of live animals imported into Britain in each of the past 15 years.

Mr. Soames: Trade data are only available for the United Kingdom as a whole. Annual data for years prior to 1993 on the numbers and types of animals imported into the United Kingdom can be found within the Central Statistical Office publication "MA 20—Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom" and its predecessor publications. Data for 1993 are still provisional and subject to change but can be obtained by amalgamating the year to date data from two further Central Statistical Office publications, namely the "MM20—Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom with countries outside the EC" for December 1993 and the "MQ20—Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom with countries within the EC" for the fourth quarter of 1993.

Copies of all these publications can be found in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many animals were exported from the United Kingdom for veal and foie gras production in the latest available year;

(2) for what purposes animals have been exported from the United Kingdom in the latest available year.

Mr. Soames: Exports of live animals from the United Kingdom are generally for one of three purposes: (i) for breeding, (ii) for further production, or (iii) for immediate slaughter.

Trade data on exports for production of veal and foie gras are not available; however, no live geese were exported last year.

Animals exported from, or imported to, the United Kingdom are recorded under the internationally used United Nations standard industrial trade classification system. This does not comprehensively classify the purposes for which animals are exported. Details of the system can be found in the Central Statistical Office publication "MA 21—Guide to the Classification of Overseas Trade Statistics", and in particular division 00 thereof, a copy of which can be found in the House of Commons Library.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many local registered veterinary inspectors in the United Kingdom there were in every year since 1979.

Mr. Soames: The recorded number of local veterinary inspectors in Great Britain in each of the years 1987-93 is as follows:

Year	Number of LVIs
1987	4,870
1988	5,120
1989	5,165

Year	Number of LVIs
1990	5,370
1991	5,479
1992	5,852
1993	5,841

Figures prior to 1987 are not readily available.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current Government position on the export of live animals; and what legislative changes have occurred since 1979.

Mr. Soames: The Government continue to press for high standards of animal health and welfare to be applied throughout the European Community to the transport of animals, including exports.

Legislative changes since 1979 are listed as follows:

(a) EC Directive 91/628/EEC on the protection of animals during transport (OJ No. L340, 11 12 1991, p. 17) (revoked and replaced two earlier directives).

(b) The following national (GB) legislation came into force which also implements the above directive:—
  - The Transit of Animals (Road and Rail) (Amendment) Order 1979, S.I. 1979/1013
  - The Export of Animals (Protection) Order 1981, S.I. 1981/1051
  - The Transit of Animals (Amendment) Order 1988, S.I. 1988/815
  - The Welfare of Poultry (Transport) Order 1988, S.I. 1988/851
  - The Welfare of Poultry (Transport) (Amendment) Order 1989, S.I. 1989/52
  - The Welfare of Animals during Transport Order 1992, S.I. 1992/3304

(c) In addition, a number of EC directives laying down detailed animal health rules governing intra-community trade in live animals have been implemented in Great Britain by means of the Animals and Animal Products (Import and Export) Regulations 1993 (S.I. 1993/3247).

Cereals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much a farmer growing cereals will be paid in arable aid for each hectare of cereals grown in 1993-94 in England, inclusive of less-favoured areas; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The payment rate for cereals in England under the arable area payments scheme for 1993-94 will be 207.55 ecu per hectare. This will be converted to sterling at the green rate prevailing on 1 July 1994. At the current green rate, this would amount to £191 per hectare.

Payments will be reduced if the base area is exceeded.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she plans to publish her departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. Jack: Copies of the Department's explanatory note on the implementation of the code of practice have been made available on request to the Ministry's helpline and a copy of the note has been placed in the Library of the House. Details were announced in a news release on 5 April. We are now working on making available, under the terms of the code at paragraph 3(ii), explanatory material on our dealings with the public subject to the provisions of confidentiality under part II of the code. The code envisages that this material is made available, as soon as practicable. There is a very substantial amount of material, covering all facets of the Ministry's schemes and procedures. We hope to make good progress by the end of the year.

Slaughtering

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to introduce specific labelling of meat slaughtered under legal exemption by pre-stunning slaughter methods.

Mr. Soames: I have no such plans.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many horses are slaughtered for export in EC-approved abattoirs in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: The four slaughterhouses in the United Kingdom licensed to slaughter horses for export last year handled around 4,000 equines for human consumption. Data are not kept on the destination of the meat, but so far as my Department is aware the vast majority of the meat produced was exported.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she has taken to ensure that the piece rate payments scheme operated widely in the United Kingdom slaughterhouses does not cause cruelty as a result of its emphasis on speed.

Mr. Soames: It is the responsibility of all engaged in the slaughtering of animals to ensure that the requirements of welfare legislation are observed. This applies irrespective of the method of payment to the abattoir work force.

Animal Sales

Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans she has to restrict the numbers of times animals, except for calves, can be presented for sale in any month.

Mr. Soames: The restrictions on the sale of calves, under the Welfare of Animals at Markets Order 1990, were introduced in response to specific concerns about the hawking of very young calves from market to market. The order was amended last year to give added protection for young lambs and goats in markets. This legislation will be kept under review, but it is not evident that further controls, equivalent to the restrictions on marketing of calves, are needed for other categories of farm animal.

Scrapie

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to which animal species scrapie and similar diseases have been transmitted.

Mr. Soames: I shall write to the hon. Member since the position is complicated and depends not only on the species of animal but the genetic make-up of the individual animal and the strain of scrapie involved in the trial.

BSE

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of (a) United Kingdom dairy herds, (b) United Kingdom beef suckler herds and (c) total United Kingdom herds with adult breeding cattle have experienced at least one case of BSE, since November 1986.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Since November 1986 approximately 58 per cent. of dairy herds, 13 per cent. of beef suckler herds and 27 per cent. of total herds in the United Kingdom have experienced at least one confirmed case of BSE. Records are not available which separate the total number of herds with adult breeding cattle.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Luxembourg on 10 June; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: I represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 10 June in Luxembourg, together with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland and my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

The Council unanimously adopted a framework regulation enabling it to decide, on a case-by-case basis, when licences for fishing should be supplemented by a special permit to fish in certain waters, so as to enable the nature and extent of the fishing effort deployed to be tightly prescribed, monitored and enforced. I recognised the need for this new management tool, notably following the completion of negotiations on the integration of Spain and Portugal and then Norway into the CFP. However, I told the Council that I shared the concerns of the United Kingdom fishing industry about the practical implications of this additional layer of administration. Moreover, I pointed out that the burdensome weight of fisheries regulation was an issue that went wider than the permit scheme. A number of other member states expressed similar preoccupations.

In response, the Commission made a formal statement that its proposals for any specific application of permits will take account of the practical and economic implications for fishermen. While it must be effective in securing the controls required, any scheme imposing permits must involve the minimum administrative burden and efficient arrangements for the initial issue and subsequent modification of permits. The management of any permit scheme will be a matter for the member states.

The Council concluded that permits should not be required for fishing vessels under 10 m in length operating exclusively within their territorial waters and the Council deferred a decision on whether the permit system should apply to EU vessels operating in third country waters. I welcomed the outcome of this negotiation, which demonstrated the willingness of the Council and the Commission to take proper account of the realities of the fishing industry.

In a wider recognition of the burdens of regulation on the fishing industry, the Commission responded positively to my suggestion that it examine systematically how the current body of regulation can be simplified. It made it clear that it would welcome proposals from the fishing industry—an offer which I hope our own fishermen will take up.

In the absence of a European parliamentary opinion, no decisions were taken on the Commission's proposal on drift nets and the Council held only a general discussion. Officials will continue to examine the proposals, and particularly the scope for enhanced enforcement of the north-east Atlantic tuna industry. The Council will revert to the issue when the European Parliament's opinion is available. Meanwhile, EU fishing vessels are prohibited from using drift nets longer than 2·5 km in any fishery.

The Council unanimously adopted a mandate for the Commission to open negotiations with Greenland, under the EU/Greenland agreement, on the fishing opportunities and other arrangements to apply for the five-year period beginning 1 January 1995. The United Kingdom benefits from opportunities to fish at Greenland.

The Council discussed Canadian legislation enabling Canada to act against flag of convenience and unflagged vessels in the area administered by the North West Atlantic Fisheries Organisation. The Council agreed that the EU should inform Canada of its concern about the extent of the powers taken and urge Canada to co-ordinate her enforcement activities with NAFO partners, including the EU. I agreed that such an approach should be made but was unhappy about the terms in which it was expressed and as a consequence abstained on the matter in order to allow a community view to go forward.

The Council had a limited discussion on the state of the market for fisheries' products. I pressed the Commission to provide the complete analysis of this complex problem which had been previously promised. This was agreed, and the Commission was asked to undertake the work and report back to the September Fisheries Council, if appropriate with proposals.

The Council unanimously approved a proposal, which will be adopted as soon as the European Parliament's opinion is available, on the methodology for measuring the tonnage of fishing vessels, which is important for managing a number of aspects of the CFP. To take account of the difficulties the EU fishing industry faces, it was agreed that an estimating formula could be adopted for vessels below 15 m and that, for medium-sized vessels —15 to 24 m—an extended deadline of 1 January 2004 would be allowed for completion of the measuring exercise. This outcome will be very helpful to the United Kingdom.

The Council unanimously adopted a regulation covering the EU's Mediterranean waters which introduces technical conservation rules, notably about the use of various kinds of fishing nets and other gear.

A Commission proposal establishing compensation for the additional costs incurred in the marketing of certain fisheries products from the Azores, Madeira, the Canary Islands and the French Department of Guiana as a result of their very remote location was adopted by qualified majority vote. The Netherlands and the United Kingdom were unable to support the measure because the funding procedures adopted were not satisfactory.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 30 and 31 May; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This meeting of the Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, held only a brief discussion of the Commission's price proposals for farm support prices for 1994-95 and related measures and concluded that adoption of this package should be an urgent priority for its next meeting on 20 June.

At the instigation of the German Minister, the Council discussed bovine spongiform encephalopathy. The Commissioner, Mr. Steichen, reaffirmed the need for policy to be based on science, stressing that there were no grounds for questioning the current trade rules for meat and live animals. I explained the comprehensive measures adopted by the United Kingdom to bring BSE under control and safeguard against any risk to public health. I and several other Ministers endorsed the Commission's plan to maintain surveillance, to tighten the rules on rendering processes and the use of specified bovine offals in cosmetics and to extend to the whole of the Community the ban on feeding meat and bone meal to ruminants which the United Kingdom adopted in 1988.

The Council unanimously agreed to extend until 30 June 1994 the marketing year for various fruits and vegetables.

Sheep Premium Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is (a) the estimated number of farmers in England entitled to receive sheep premium grants and (b) the number of claims, together with the corresponding percentage figure expressed as a proportion of (a), which were settled by (i) 30 April 1994, (ii) 15 May 1994 and (iii) 31 May 1994.

Mr. Jack: Some 64,000 sheep producers in England received automatic allocations of quota, or received quota under the special arrangements for 1992, first time claimants. These producers were eligible for payments under the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme, provided they met the other requirements of the scheme. Some farmers combine to submit only one claim and the total number of 1993 claims was 42,713. As at 30 April 1994, 88 per cent. of first and second advances under the 1993 scheme had been paid and 65 per cent. had also received the final payment. At 15 May, the corresponding figures were 89 per cent. and 72 per cent. respectively and at 31 May 89 per cent. and 86 per cent. respectively.

Over-grazing

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total cost for England in (a) 1991, (b) 1992 and (c) 1993 and what is her estimate for 1994 of (i) the sheep annual premium, (ii) the suckler cow premium and (iii) the beef special premium; what estimates her Department has made of the environmental damage caused in England through over-grazing by livestock for which each of those premia are being paid; what estimates her Department has made of environmental damage other than over-grazing being caused in England on farm land grazed by livestock for which the above premia are being paid; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Expenditure in England on the three schemes is shown in the table. I have no figures for the value of any environmental damage attributable to these schemes.

	1991	1992	1993	1994 (estimate)
Beef Special Premium			63·9	75·4
including extensification premium	21·1	25·8	82·6	92·4
Suckler Cow Premium			43·5	64·3
including extensification premium	33·9	38·8	55·9	77·8
Sheep Annual Premium (including Less Favoured Area Supplement)	120·0	175·1	182·4	208·6

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps she intends to take to prevent environmental damage other than over-grazing on grazed land, with particular reference to lowland areas.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Our policies will continue to employ a range of instruments to help prevent environment damage. These include codes of good agricultural practice for the protection of soil, water and air; the provision of free advice to farmers on conservation and avoiding pollution; a number of targeted incentive schemes—for example, environmentally sensitive areas scheme—and safeguards within the arable support scheme.

The reformed arable support arrangements also include measures to prevent environmental damage. They render permanent grassland ineligible for arable support payments. And all farmers receiving arable support payments must observe a range of conditions on set-aside land, including protection of environmental features, requirements on maintenance of a green cover to minimise nitrate leaching and restrictions on the use of fertilisers and pesticides.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Service Staff

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of health visitors, district nurses, school nurses and community psychiatric nurses expressed as whole-time equivalents at September 1988, September 1989, September 1990, September 1991 and September 1992.

Mr. Ancram: Information on health visitors, district nurses and school nurses is available only on a comparative basis for the three years 1990 to 1992 and is set out in the table, expressed as whole-time equivalents at September of each year.

Health visitors	324·41	395·37	454·53
District nurses	619·06	639·12	719·30
School nurses	70·22	71·50	85·45

Information on community psychiatric nurses is available only for 1992 and is set out in the table, expressed as whole-time equivalents at September.

Community psychiatric nurses	183·00

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the planned numbers of health visitors, district nurses, school nurses and community psychiatric nurses, health visitors, students and district nurse students for 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998 and 1999.

Mr. Ancram: Information on the planned numbers, expressed as whole-time equivalents, is as follows:

	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999
Health visitors	540·61	538·61	537·61	[1]—	[1]—
District nurses	842·95	842·95	842·95	[1]—	[1]—
School nurses	110·43	110·43	110·43	[1]—	[1]—
Community psychiatric nurses	371·01	384·51	384·51	[1]—	[1]—
Planned secondments by Health and Personal Social Services employing authorities in each year are as follows:
Health visitors students	6·00	8·00	6·00	6·00	[1]—
District nurse students	20·00	18·00	17·00	17·00	[1]—

[1] Information is not available centrally.

Planning

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will require the Department of the Environment planning service to ensure that all land in housing development sites will be allocated to house property and that developers will no longer be permitted to abandon and leave derelict any area of land within a housing development.

Mr. Tim Smith: The Department of the Environment (NI) considers that, where circumstances permit, the provision of open space in new housing development is desirable. However, the Department recognises that the on-going maintenance of such open space can cause difficulties and normal practice is now only to make its provision a requirement of planning permission where future maintenance arrangements can be put in place.

Health Workers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of health visitor students and district nurse students in training expessed as whole-time equivalents at March 1988, March 1989, March 1990, March 1991, March 1992 and March 1993.

Mr. Ancram: The number of students who commenced training, expressed as whole-time equivalents, in each year is as follows:

Year	Health visitors	District nurses
1988	35	28
1989	23	22
1990	31	20
1991	29	9
1992	24	10
1993	29	15

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many recommendations from the Planning Appeals Commission on planning inquiries held in Northern Ireland since 1973 have not been upheld by the responsible Minister.

Mr. Tim Smith: Ten.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each of the last five years the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Sir John Wheeler: Details of payments to individual consultancy firms have not been disclosed as this would breach commercial confidentiality. A list of the consultancy firms employed each year has been placed in the library.

Expenditure on consultants by Northern Ireland Departments for each of the last five financial years is as follows:

1989-90	12,901,349
1990-91	7,674,423
1991-92	12,987,469
1992-93	8,717,868
1993-94	15,408,337

Loyalist Paramilitary Groups

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of persons suspected of being loyalist paramilitary members and those suspected of being republican paramilitary members who were arrested in the Ards area between January and July 1993; how many in each category were subsequently charged; and what were the figures in each case for the period July 1993 to May 1994.

Sir John Wheeler: The available information is for the Newtownards RUC sub-division, and is as follows:

	1 January 1993 to 31 July 1993	1 August 1993 to 31 May 1994
Number of suspect loyalists arrested	34	30
Suspect loyalists charged	13	5
Number of suspect republicans arrested	1	3
Suspect republicans charged	—	—

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of deaths due to terrorism have been caused by loyalist paramilitary groups in each of the past 20 years in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: An annual breakdown, attributing murders to specific terrorist groups, is available only from 1987. The figures are set out as follows:

	By Loyalists		By Republicans
	Number	Per centage	Number	Percentage
1987	15	19	65	81
1988	22	26	62	74
1989	18	32	39	68
1990	19	29	46	71
1991	40	46	47	54
1992	39	52	36	48
1993	47	57	35	43

For the whole period 1969 to 1993, the approximate breakdown is 32 per cent. by Loyalists and 68 per cent. by Republicans.

Schools (Capital Funding)

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will provide a detailed list of the schools in both the primary and secondary sectors in Northern Ireland that have received capital funding over the past four years; and what were the amounts in each case.

Mr. Ancram: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Licences

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations took place before, and what considerations underlay, the decision to cease issuing vehicle licenses through post offices in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Brendan Magee. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brendan Magee to Mr. Michael Connarty, dated 6 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question regarding the decision to cease issuing vehicle licences through post offices in Northern Ireland.

Only 14 post offices in Northern Ireland are designated for re-licensing of vehicles. Figures for 1993-94 show that 61 per cent. of customers licensed their vehicles at DVLNI local offices, 22 per cent. by post to DVLNI Head Office and 17 per cent. at the designated post offices.

The key consideration underlying the decision was the need for DVLNI to make economies to live within its budget allocation for 1994-95. DVLNI is a demand led organisation engaged on the core activities of registering vehicles, licensing vehicles and the issuing of driver licenses. When savings need to be made they have to be in the method of delivery as the Agency cannot limit the volumes of business.

Prior to the decision being made, the Agency Advisory Board was told of the difficulties created by the shortfall in funding. After further discussions with the Agency's parent department (DOE NI) a paper was prepared informing the Minister of DVLNI's intention to withdraw the facility. Post Office Counters Ltd. were also kept informed.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Sir John Wheeler: The principles contained within the code of practice on Government information have applied to the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments since 4 April 1994. In common with United Kingdom Departments, we will use the central guidance on interpretation of the code, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will set out by county a breakdown of the 1993 arable area payments scheme.

Mr. Ancram: To date the number of applications received and amounts paid under the EC arable area scheme in Northern Ireland by county are as follows:

County	Main scheme (set-aside)		Simplified scheme
	Total No. of applications	Total amount paid £	Total No. of applications	Total amount paid £
Antrim	7	62,681·75	670	610,590·73
Armagh	7	88,088·92	249	225,733·59
Down	66	661,110·32	1,039	1,095,369·67
Fermanagh	—	—	2	1,136·02
Londonderry	32	285,703·41	658	638,822·28
Tyrone	7	46,910·24	334	295,806·12
TOTAL	119	1,144,494·64	2,952	2,867,458·41

Special Schools

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children currently attend special schools in Northern Ireland; what is the estimated cost during the school year 1993-94 of providing a mid-day meal for pupils in special schools in Northern Ireland; and what is the estimated saving to the Department of Education (Northern Ireland) arising from the decision to introduce a charge for school meals in special schools during the 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97 school years from September 1994.

Mr. Ancram: The number of children attending special schools in Northern Ireland is 4,392.

Cost estimates are not available on a school year basis, but the estimated cost during the financial year 1993-94 of providing a mid-day meal for pupils in special schools in Northern Ireland was £701,000.

The estimated savings arising from the decision to charge for school meals from September 1994 in the financial years 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97 are as follows:

1994-95	65,000
1995-96	180,000
1996-97	275,000

Police, Castlereagh

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the population of the borough of Castlereagh; how many community police officers operate within the borough; and if he will make a statement on the adequacy of policing within the borough.

Sir John Wheeler: At the time of the last census in 1991, the population of the borough of Castlereagh was 60,799.

The deployment of police officers is an operational responsibility of the Chief Constable, but I understand that three sergeants and 28 constables are dedicated to "community police officer" duty in the Castlereagh area. However, all officers are encouraged to adopt a community role at all times.

The Chief Constable takes into account both operational requirements and available resources in the deployment of police officers.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Sir John Wheeler: If it is the intention of the Northern Ireland Office or of any of the Northern Ireland Departments to make responses to a consultation document publicly available, those consulted are informed that their responses will be made public unless the writer explicitly asks for them to be kept confidential.

The code of practice on Government information commits Government Departments to publishing relevant facts and analysis underlying major policy proposals and decisions and this will include the details of consultation responses. The code does not require provision of the responses themselves, although this will often be the most straightforward way of providing the information.

Housing Association Ombudsman

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in appointing an ombudsman for housing association tenants in both Northern Ireland and Wales.

Mr. Tim Smith: It is intended to appoint an ombudsman for tenants of registered housing associations in Northern Ireland by the end of the year. This is in line with the commitment contained in "The Citizen's Charter Second Report 1994". The position in Wales is a matter for the Secretary of State for Wales.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list for each of the last five years the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sproat: Since it was established in April 1992, my Department and its two agencies awarded contracts as follows:

(a) KPMG—seven contracts valued at approximately £186,000.
(b) Touche Ross—two contracts valued at approximately £210,000.
(c) Price Waterhouse—three contracts valued at approximately £221,000.
(d) Ernst and Young—four contracts valued at approximately £162,000.
(e) CSL—nil.
(f) Prime—nil.

It is not possible, without involving disproportionate cost, to give figures for each of the three financial years since the Department was established.

National Lottery

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whe[illegible]e expects to publish in final form his directions to the distributing bodies of the national lottery.

Mr. Brooke: I will shortly issue final directions under section 26(1) and (2) of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 to the Arts Council of England, the Sports Council, the Millennium Commission and trustees of the National Heritage Memorial Fund. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will issue similar directions to the distributing bodies operating in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary will issue directions to the National Lottery Charities Board when it has been established. Financial directions under section 26(3) will shortly be issued to all the established distributing bodies for formal consultation.

Treasure Trove

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will now consult the National Council for Metal Detecting concerning treasure trove.

Mr. Brooke: Treasure trove is now the responsibility of my Department. The National Council for Metal Detecting has been consulted on treasure trove by the sponsors of a private peer's Bill, the Treasure Bill, which secured Government support during its passage through the House of Lords. The Bill aims to reform the law of treasure trove and provides for a statutory code of practice on the payment of rewards. If the Bill completes its passage through the Commons, my Department has undertaken to consult interested parties on the code of practice and this consultation would certainly include the National Council for Metal Detecting.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. Sproat: My Department published its procedural note setting out how the Department intends to respond to requests made under the code of practice on access to government information, on 30 March 1994. A press release issued on 29 March explained how the public could obtain copies of the note.

I have placed a copy of the note in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Non-departmental Bodies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the non-departmental bodies in Scotland the conduct of which can be referred to the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Mr. Lang: The non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department subject to investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration are as follows:

The Crofters Commission
The Red Deer Commission
Scottish Homes—except in respect of actions as a landlord
The Scottish Legal Aid Board
Scottish Natural Heritage
The Scottish Medical Practices Committee
The Scottish Sports Council
The Scottish Tourist Board

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory provisions govern the right of appointed members of non-departmental public bodies to inspect information held by that organisation; and in what circumstances such information can be withheld from them.

Mr. Lang: The detailed right of members of any NDPB depend on the basis on which the body was set up. Some NDPBs are governed by the Companies Acts, some by other statutes or royal charter and others have no statutory basis. However, as the board of an NDPB has ultimate responsibility for the performance of the body, I would expect its members to have access to all material information held by the body.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will release immediate dedicated funding to enable Scottish local authorities to provide more homes that are suited to the needs of elderly and disabled persons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Substantial resources totalling some £426 million have been made available to local authorities in 1994-95 for investment to meet the housing needs of their areas. These allocations are generally not earmarked for specific purposes and it is for local authorities themselves to determine how to utilise the resources available to them, including the level of expenditure on the provision of housing suited to the needs of the elderly and disabled.

Alcohol (Illegal Resale)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions have taken place since 1 January 1993 of people illegally importing and reselling alcoholic liquor in Scotland; how many resulted in fines or imprisonment; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics in this category are not separately kept and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the meetings of the proposed authorities will be in public and their guidelines about the need for openness and accountability will be the same as for local authorities.

Sir Hector Monro: The new water and sewerage authorities will not be part of local government. It would, therefore, be inappropriate for them to be required to follow guidelines produced for local authorities. It will be for the new authorities themselves to decide whether any of their meetings should be open to the public. The new authorities will be under a statutory obligation to have regard to the interests of every person who is a customer or potential customer and the customers council will be established to represent the interests of customers and potential customers to the new authorities.

Foreign Students

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many third-level students from (a) the Republic of Ireland, (b) other European Community countries and (c) non-European Community countries were enrolled in universities and colleges in Scotland in each year since 1984-85; and what has been the cost or income in each category to the Scottish education budget.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

Students enrolled in Scottish universities and colleges from:

Year	(a) Republic of Ireland	(b) Other European Union countries	(c) Non-European Union countries
1984-85	58	493	4,849
1985-86	60	592	5,752
1986-87	90	654	6,378
1987-88	163	788	6,253
1988-89	282	970	6,049
1989-90	366	1,521	6,316
1990-91	450	2,028	6,429
1991-92	596	2,669	6,408
1992-93	763	3,369	6,665

For 1993-94, the total cost of tuition fees for students from European Union countries met by the Scottish education budget and administered by the Student Awards Agency for Scotland is £5·7 million. Equivalent figures for 1992-93 and 1991-92 are £4·8 million and £3·1 million respectively.

Students from non-European Union countries are expected to meet the full cost of their tuition. Income from non-European Union students is credited to the host institution and not to the education budget.

Law Students

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students are currently studying for a diploma in legal practice at each Scottish university.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information collected by the Law Society of Scotland for the academic year 1993-94 is as follows:

University	Number of Students
Aberdeen	92
Dundee	75
Edinburgh	116
Glasgow	113
Strathclyde	102
Total Scotland	498

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has of the total cost involved in funding a law student who completes an LLB and diploma in legal practice at a Scottish university.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The estimated cost of full public funding for a student completing a four-year LLB and a one-year diploma in legal practice is £28,550. This estimate assumes full funding of tuition by the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council and full student support based on elsewhere maintenance rates, no parental/spouse contribution and no excess travel.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students currently studying for a diploma in legal practice at Scottish universities have not yet secured a legal traineeship place.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest available estimate is 230.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish Education Department-funded places there are for the diploma in legal practice each year.

Lord James Dougals-Hamilton: Institutional grant funding for teaching at Scottish higher education institutions is now the responsibility of the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council. There is no separate category or allocation of funded or fees-only places for the diploma in legal practice. Taught undergraduate and postgraduate courses in law and legal studies are included but not specified by SHEFC in the broader category of "Social Sciences". The number of post-graduate student awards available for Scottish-domiciled students undertaking the diploma course in 1993-94 is 390. Other students may finance their own costs of tuition and maintenance.

Gender Reassignment Surgery

Mrs. Fyffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will use his powers to require the Western general trust hospital, Edinburgh, to continue its previous policy of carrying out at least one gender reassignment operation per year or to ensure that an appropriate hospital in the Lothian health board area continues to carry out this work;

(2) what is his policy on the availability and funding of gender reassignment surgery.

Mr. Stewart: It is a matter for individual health boards to decide whether to purchase gender reassignment services and, if so, what resources to devote to them.

Lothian health board has decided not to purchase gender reassignment routinely from 1 April 1994. However, I understand that the board will enable patients who have already undergone the complex counselling and other preparatory work and are already on a waiting list to proceed to surgery where a commitment has previously been given.

Cancer

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many cases of bone cancer per 100,000 head of population there have been in Scotland in each year since 1970;

(2) how many cases of cancers of all types per 100,000 head of population there have been in Scotland in each of the years since 1970.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is set out in the table:

Year of diagnosis	Rate per 100,000 population Bone and connective tissue	All malignant neoplasms
1970	2·55	298·90
1971	2·52	289·21
1972	2·49	309·20
1973	3·00	322·57
1974	2·44	314·47
1975	2·94	355·78
1976	3·00	356·25
1977	3·21	365·03
1978	2·86	379·85
1979	3·15	383·23
1980	3·27	395·19
1981	3·11	403·19
1982	2·40	407·22

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 May, Official Report, column 407, if he will list the ways in which trust status will allow the Scottish ambulance service to make much faster progress towards the achievement of its four main objectives listed in his answer.

Mr. Stewart: Faster progress is expected because:

a. the trust board will be dedicated full-time to the running of an ambulance service, facilitating faster decision making;

b. the trust will have freedom to negotiate with staff and their local representatives on terms and conditions of service which encourage and reward performance;

c. local accountability will improve the responsiveness of the service; and

d. the trust will have freedom to optimise the use of its assets and resources to enhance patient care.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the last five years the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 21 February 1994, Official Report, columns 51-52, and to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 16 March 1994, Official Report, columns 659-60.

Health Workers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of health visitors, district nurses, school nurses and community psychiatric nurses expressed as whole-time equivalents in September of each year from 1988 to 1992.

Mr. Stewart: For information on the requested categories of community nurses, I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to her on 16 June 1993, Official Report, columns 547-50.

Figures for school nurses are as follows:

Whole-time equivalent at 30 September

Year	Number
1988	234·4
1989	229·6
1990	232·9
1991	292·4
1992	286·5

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of health visitor students and district nurse students in training expressed as whole-time equivalents in March of each year from 1988 to 1993.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is shown in the table.

Health Visitors and District Nurses in training: Whole-time equivalents as at 31 March

	In Training	Health Visitors	District Nurses
1988	249	104	145
1989	190	81	109
1990	212	109	103
1991	146	85	61
1992	108	52	56
[1]1993	104	51	53

[1] 1993 figures are estimates.

Note: Statistics may not include students who are not on the NHS payroll.

Sexual Abuse

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases relating to the sexual abuse of children were reported by the police to the procurator fiscal in each Scottish region in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not readily available and cannot be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many payments were made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board which resulted from the sexual abuse of children in Scotland in each of the past five years; and what was the total paid in awards for each year:

(2) how many awards made by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board relating to the sexual abuse of children in Scotland in each of the last five years involved a case where a criminal conviction also resulted.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many claims where recevied by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board which resulted from the sexual abuse of children in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of applications received by the board relating to the sexual abuse of children in Great Britain is set out:

Year	Number
1989-90	1,318
1990-91	1,812
1991-92	2,881
1992-93	3,200

The board's records do not show how many of the applications result from the sexual abuse of children in Scotland.

The board did not record statistical information of this type before April 1989 and the information for 1993-94 is not yet available.

Coxsackie Virus

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being undertaken into the coxsackie virus in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Information on this is not held centrally, but my Department is aware that the Aberdeen university microbiology department is deeply involved in research into the coxsackie virus, particularly in relation to heart disease and chronic fatigue syndrome. This research is being funded by the Wellcome Trust, the Linbury Trust and the British Heart Foundation. A joint research project is currently planned with a group at the Southern general hospital in Glasgow.

In addition the regional virus laboratory at Ruchill hospital, Glasgow is conducting research into the early diagnosis of coxsackie infections using a technique which can identify small amounts of DNA to replace traditional methods of culture. The relationship between coxsackie viruses and chronic fatigue syndrome, aseptic meningitis and juvenile onset diabetes are also actively under research investigation. This work is currently supported by grants from the ME Association and the Linbury Trust.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the incidence of the coxsackie virus in Scotland in the last two years; and in what geographical areas the problem has been identified.

Mr. Lang: The available information is derived from reports confirming the infection received from laboratories by the Scottish Centre for Infection and Environmental Health. The figures for 1992 and 1993 for each health board area are set out. These data do not necessarily reflect the total incidence of the infection in the community, since doctors do not routinely send specimens from every case for laboratory confirmation.

Health board area	Number of laboratory reports 1992	1993
Argyll and Clyde	45	79
Ayrshire and Arran	10	4
Borders	5	1
Dumfries and Galloway	29	44

Scotland	637	608

[1] Cases where the laboratory reported the isolation of Coxsackie virus but where information on the health board area of residence of the patient was not recorded.

Operating Theatres

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operating theatres are currently in use; and what plans there are to increase their number in any health board areas.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not collected centrally.

Stammering

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider giving financial support for an all-Scotland specialist centre for children who stammer; and what estimate he has made of the cost of providing this service.

Mr. Stewart: The Scottish Office has only recently received a proposal for such a service submitted by the Association for Stammerers. I shall write to the hon. Member once this has been considered.

Rev. Morris McKenzie

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will establish a judicial inquiry into the actions of agencies involved and the circumstances connected with the detention of the Rev. Morris McKenzie and the search of his and church premises in South Ronaldsay on 27 February 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. Lang: My Department's internal guidance on the commitment in the code of practice to answer requests for information has been available since the beginning of April. I am arranging for a copy of that guidance to be sent to the hon. Member and for copies to be placed in the Library of the House. Internal guidance on the code's other commitments will be made available in due course.

Surgeons

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) newly qualified surgeons and (b) surgeons from outwith Scotland took up posts in NHS hospitals; and how many left the service, in the most recent full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Stewart: In the year ending 30 September 1993, 31 newly qualified consultant surgeons were appointed to posts in NHS hospitals in Scotland and 21 consultant surgeons left the NHS in Scotland either on retiral or for other reasons. Fifteen of the newly qualified consultant surgeons were appointed from outwith the NHS in Scotland. A further two previously qualified consultant surgeons were recruited from outwith Scotland.

These data are derived from a linked comparison of 1992 and 1993 census files. Excluded, therefore, are any doctors who join and then leave between those census dates, although the number is likely to be negligible.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which surgical specialities there remains a shortfall in qualified surgeons; and what steps are being taken to overcome the shortage.

Mr. Stewart: From the information available on consultant posts in the surgical specialities, 92 per cent. of posts advertised since January 1993 have been filled. The senior registrar establishment has been increased in 1994 in ear, nose and throat surgery, general surgery, orthopaedic surgery, plastic surgery and urology. NHS employers have been advised to fill and maintain the senior registrar establishment in all the surgical specialities to provide the numbers of trained surgeons expected to be needed in the future.

Adoption

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proposals his Department has for ensuring that adoption services are part of the full range of child care services provided by each of the new local authorities;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the effect of local government reorganisation on adoption services;

(3) what proposals his Department has for ensuring that adoption agencies will continue to provide the same range of placement options for children requiring specialist services pre and post-placement.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided about adoption services by my hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 31 March, Official Report, columns 832-33.

Reorganisation of local government will involve some restructuring of services for children, including adoption. But every care will be taken to ensure that services currently available will be maintained. The strategic child care plans which are to be developed from the proposals in "Scotland's Children" will be of direct relevance in this respect. My officials have already had preliminary discussions about reorganisation with the British Agencies for Adoption and Fostering which are grant aided by the Government and which have an important national role to play in the development of adoption services.

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many adoptions were arranged in the last five years by: (a) voluntary organisations, (b) local authorities and (c) in total;

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the ability of voluntary organisations to arrange adoptions at current levels.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of adoption applications made to Scottish courts in the five years to 1992 are as follows:

	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
Voluntary agencies	58	49	65	54	36
Local Authorities	355	326	327	250	257
Non-agency	423	482	386	357	493
TOTAL	836	857	778	[1]737	786

[1] Total includes a further 76 cases for which information on applicant or agency is not available.

Information on the number of adoptions granted is not available centrally. However, the number of applications granted was on average 97 per cent. of applications made.

Under the Adoption (Scotland) Act 1978, voluntary adoption societies are subject to approval by the Secretary of State in order to ensure that they maintain high professional standards of service and that statutory requirements are observed. Approval is based on periodic inspections, on-going monitoring of the operation of societies and assessment of their effective contribution to the adoption service.

Trauma Centres

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evaluation of trauma centres is being conducted, and by whom; and if that evaluation will include the future role of accident and emergency departments which will not cater for such tasks as are to be transferred to trauma centres.

Mr. Stewart: The report of a policy review by the Scottish Office Home and Health Department, entitled "Emergency Healthcare in Scotland: Future Structure of Accident and Emergency Services", was published on 11 April 1994. The NHS Management Executive is considering how the recommendations in the report for the future provision of trauma and other accident and emergency services in Scotland should be taken forward.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 738, how many people have died from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease between April 1993 and May 1994; and if he will list in each case the names of the deceased and the location of death and the duration of the illness; and whether the procurator fiscal has made a decision as to whether there should be a fatal accident inquiry.

Mr. Lang: The number of people in Scotland who have died from Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease between April 1993 and April 1994 is as follows. The figure for May 1994 is not yet available.

	Number
Definite	28
Probable	9
TOTAL	37

The names of the deceased cannot be disclosed on grounds of patient confidentiality. Information about the location of deaths from CJD, both definite and probable, for the period April 1993 to April 1994 will be published in the third annual report of the CJD surveillance unit in early July. The information requested on the duration of the illness in each case and on any associated fatal accident inquiries is not held centrally.

Arable Area Payments Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out by region a breakdown of the 1993 arable area payments scheme.

Sir Hector Monro: A breakdown of 1993 claims in Scotland under the arable area payments scheme could only be provided on a regional basis at disproportionate costs. The information is, however, available on an less-favoured area/non-LFA basis and is as follows:

	LFA (ha)	non-LFA (ha)	Total (ha)
Cereals	40,334	277,997	318,331
Oilseeds	5,013	56,738	61,751
Protein crops	48	4,101	4,149
Set-aside	8,742	61,619	70,361
Simplified Scheme	35,062	20,985	56,047

Health Boards (Motor Cars)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of money spent on motor cars by (a) health boards and (b) hospital trusts in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not held centrally. Neither health boards nor NHS trusts are required to seek prior approval for the purchase of motor cars.

NHS Trusts

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what number and proportion of members of hospital trusts are (a) doctors, (b) nurses, (c) members of other health professions and (d) ancillary hospital workers.

Mr. Stewart: General and dental practitioners and employees of health service bodies are ineligible for appointment as chairman or non-executive director of an NHS trust. On the basis of information held centrally, 28—12 per cent.—of non-executive appointees have medical qualifications, seven—2 per cent.—have nursing qualifications and nine—4 per cent.—are members of other health professions. Of the five executive directors on each trust, at least one must be a medical or dental practitioner and one must be a registered nurse or registered midwife.

Fine Defaulters

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners were serving sentences for fine defaults at the latest available date given (a) as an absolute number and (b) as a percentage of the prison population and broken down by gender.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for the subject of this question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 14 June 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of prisoners serving sentences for fine default at the latest available date, given as an absolute number and as a percentage of the prison population, broken down by gender.

The table below gives the information for April 1994. The first column reflects only those individuals received solely to serve a sentence for fine default or those who are serving such a sentence consecutive to an existing sentence: it does not include those who may be serving a fine default sentence which is fully concurrent with an existing sentence.

Average daily population in Scottish penal establishments for April 1994

Male	75	1	5,243	95	5,318	97
Female	6	—	168	3	174	3
TOTAL	81	1	5,411	99	5,492	100

The percentages in some instances do not add to totals due to rounding.

Housing Association Tenants Ombudsman

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints have been reported upon by the housing association tenants ombudsman; how many of these have been acted upon by housing associations since December 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The housing association ombudsman service which came into operation on 1 April 1994 has received 25 complaints. All cases are still under investigation, but I am advised that the ombudsman expects action on one complaint to be resolved shortly.

National Parks

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish for each region and for Scotland as a whole (a) the total area, (b) the area occupied by national parks and (c) the percentage of area occupied by national parks.

Sir Hector Monro: There are no national parks in Scotland.

Rape and Murder Trials

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many convictions for rape and/or murder in the past 20 years have been returned on (i) an 8:7 and (ii) an 8:6 majority jury verdict.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available. Section 154 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 requires the foreman of the jury to declare only whether the verdict was not unanimous.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies and reviews he has undertaken on self-corroborated evidence in rape and murder trials; what criteria are applied when deciding whether self-corroborated evidence is sufficient for prosecution; what plans he has to revise the principle of self-corroboration in Scots law; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No piece of evidence in Scots law can corroborate itself. The essence of corroboration lies in the conjunction of separate testimonies, each from an independent sources pointing to the accused as the perpetrator of the crime. Even where there is an unequivocal admission of guilt, the law requires independent evidence from a source other than the accused pointing to the truth of his confession.

The law is well settled and applies not only in cases of rape and murder. There has, therefore, been no such studies or reviews and there are no plans to revise the principle of corroboration.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances the Solicitor-General normally becomes involved in meetings with the prosecution prior to, and during, a trial for murder and/or rape; in what proportion of such trials the Solicitor-General becomes involved in this way; what matters are likely to be discussed at such meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General for Scotland—as is my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate—is available for consultation and advice in any serious case if the need arises.

Meetings are usually informal and it is not possible to say with any accuracy in what proportion of trials they occur, or to list the matters likely to be discussed.

NHS Hospitals (Creches)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his policy that creche facilities at NHS hospitals, whether a trust status or not, should give priority to the children of hospital employees in preference to selling places to those who do not work in the hospital.

Mr. Stewart: The use of creche facilities in NHS hospitals is for the health board or NHS trust to determine.

Raymond Gilmour

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of the police officers involved in the original prosecution of Raymond Gilmour who were not interviewed in the investigation following his application for prerogative of mercy; if he will give reasons in each case; if he will detail the dates and place of any interview in which these officers participated prior to the submission of the application; if he will give the name and official designation of those conducting these interviews; and if the (a) recording and (b) transcripts of these interviews are available for public inspection.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend's letter of 18 April 1994 explained to the hon. Member that six of the seven police officers involved in the original investigation were interviewed last year and that the other officer had died in the intervening period. None of those officers was interviewed on behalf of my right hon. Friend prior to the submission of the application. The interviews were conducted by the regional procurator fiscal at Paisley and senior officers of Strathclyde police. Statements made in the course of investigations carried out on behalf of the Secretary of State are confidential.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his normal practice when considering applications for the prerogative of mercy in respect of evidence which could have been presented during original or appeal trials; how he applied this practice during his consideration of the application for the prerogative of mercy by Raymond Gilmour; what such evidence in this case he dismissed; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend may refer a case to the Court of Appeal in terms of section 263(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 where he considers that a miscarriage of justice may have taken place in the case of a convicted person. Exceptionally and alternatively, he may recommend an exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy. My right hon. Friend exercises his powers of reference only where new evidence or fresh considerations of substance can be identified in relation to a person's conviction.

The High Court has held that before it will consider new evidence on appeal it must be shown that the additional evidence was not available or could not reasonably have been made available at the trial. Accordingly, my right hon. Friend would not normally refer a case to the Court of Appeal in terms of section 263(1) of the 1975 Act on the basis of evidence which could reasonably have been led at trial.

All aspects of the petitions submitted on behalf of Mr. Gilmour last year were carefully considered, as my right hon. Friend's letter to the hon. Member of 18 April this year explained.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, during his consideration of the application for the prerogative of mercy by Raymond Gilmour, he ascertained what scientific means investigating officers used to estimate the distance between the murdered body of Pamela Hastie and the tree referred to in Gilmour's alleged confession; and how he accounts for the discrepancies between the various statements of the distance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Evidence about the location of the victim's body was before the court of trial and was therefore a matter for the jury to assess.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the investigative procedures which were followed during the consideration of the application for the prerogative of mercy by Raymond Gilmour; if he will list the departments, agencies and other bodies involved in the investigation; if he will list the name of each person interviewed during the investigation; if he will give the dates and purposes of each interview; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At the request of the Scottish Office, matters raised in the representations submitted by solicitors acting on behalf of Mr. Gilmour were thoroughly investigated by the regional procurator fiscal at Paisley with the assistance of senior police officers. The results of these investigations were duly referred to the Crown Office, which provided reports for my right hon. Friend; details of such inquiries are confidential.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the application for the prerogative of mercy was submitted on behalf of Raymond Gilmour; when it was referred to the Crown Office for investigation and assessment; when the investigative process was completed; and what date the case was referred back to the Scottish Office for decision; and what date a decision was taken.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 7 December 1993, a petition was submitted on behalf of Mr. Raymond Gilmour on 8 January 1993; this petition was referred to the Crown Office on 22 January 1993. Further representations on Mr. Gilmour's behalf were submitted on 12 March and 27 May last year. Reports were received from the Crown Office on 26 August and 2 September 1993. Further investigations were requested on behalf of the Secretary of State on 13 October 1993, the results of which were received from the Crown Office on 8 December 1993. A decision was taken on this case on 15 April 1994 and my right hon. Friend wrote to the hon. Member on 18 April 1994 to inform him of that decision.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the majority verdict given by the jury in the original trial of Raymond Gilmour; and what was the reasons for the absence of one of the jurors.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not normally known. I understand in this case however that the guilty verdict was 8:6, one juror having become unfit to continue to serve through illness.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he gave during his assessment of the application for the prerogative of mercy to the apparent inconsistencies in the explanation given by Raymond Gilmour as to his whereabouts on the day that Pamela Hastie was raped and murdered; if he will detail precisely what these apparent inconsistencies are; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This matter was not raised in the petitions submitted on Mr. Gilmour's behalf last year.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what detailed reasons were given to him by the Minister of State for his decision to withdraw from further consideration of the application for the prerogative of mercy submitted by Raymond Gilmour; on what date he was notified of this decision; if he will detail the sources from which the Minister of State sought and obtained advice; what recollections of involvement in the original prosecution led the Minister of State to decide to withdraw from consideration of the application; on what date he first reported these recollections to him; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following receipt of a report on Mr. Gilmour's case in February this year, my noble and learned Friend advised the Secretary of State in March that he intended to withdraw from consideration of the papers. My noble and learned Friend advised the hon. Member on 30 March this year of his reasons for his withdrawal and the limited nature of his earlier involvement in his previous capacity as a law officer. Decisions on such cases are taken personally by the Secretary of State.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Lang: All consultative documents issued by my Department inform those consulted that their responses will be made available to the public unless they indicate that they wish their reply to be treated as confidential.

Turing Institute

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland at what point Scottish Enterprise was informed of the financial difficulties which eventually led to the Turing Institute being forced into liquidation; what part was played by Scottish Enterprise in the decision that the institute could not continue trading; and whether financial assistance from Scottish Enterprise was sought by the institute in an attempt to stave off liquidation.

Mr. Stewart: I understand that Scottish Enterprise had been aware of the difficulties being experienced by the institute for around six months prior to it going into liquidation; that it was the directors of the institute themselves who decided to call in the liquidator and that Scottish Enterprise played no part in that decision; and that the company had made no official approach to Scottish Enterprise for further financial assistance since it had been made clear to the company that everything possible had been done to help it in its present form.

Scottish Enterprise's involvement with the institute was, however, essentially an operational matter on which Scottish Enterprise itself is best placed to advise. I know that it would be happy to discuss the matter in detail with the hon. Member if he would find that helpful.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of the minority shareholding which Scottish Enterprise took when the Turing Institute became a limited company in 1992; and what active role in the running of the institute was taken by Scottish Enterprise or its representative.

Mr. Stewart: This is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise which the hon. Member may be best advised to take up with it direct. However, I understand that Scottish Enterprise's shareholding in the company comprised £100,000 in ordinary shares and £150,000 in preference shares. Scottish Enterprise had a representative on the board of the Turing Institute who, I understand, acted as non-executive chairman.

Miscarriages of Justice

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cases of alleged miscarriage of justice, both past and present, in which the prosecuting officer was the officer whose name has been supplied to him.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any such cases in which the investigating officer was the officer in question.

Local Enterprise Companies (Pollution)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers are available to local enterprise companies to treat land polluted by industry; and what is the total area of land polluted by industry which has been treated by each local enterprise company.

Mr. Stewart: Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise have been given wide-ranging functions and general and specific powers under the Enterprise and New Towns (Scotland) Act 1990. Those include discretionary powers under section 4(1)(h) and 5(1)(e) respectively to bring derelict land into use or improve its appearance or to assist its being so brought or improved. Those powers and functions are, within certain limits, delegated to the local enterprise companies through their operating contracts with the core bodies.

Information on the total area of land polluted by industry which has been treated by each local enterprise company is not held centrally. I have therefore asked the chairmen of Scottish Enterprise and of Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member to provide the information requested.

Out-of-town Facilities

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many (a) out-of-town shopping centres and (b) out-of-town warehouse parks are currently under construction in Scotland;

(2) how many warehouse clubs are currently under construction in Scotland; and how many have planning permission but are yet to start construction;

(3) how many (a) out-of-town shopping centres and (b) out-of-town warehouse parks have planning permission but are yet to start construction in Scotland.

Mr. Stewart: Detailed information on planning applications, planning consents or projects under construction is not held centrally.

Water and Sewerage Services

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the proposed method of charging and mechanics of payment for water and sewerage services if his local government reorganisation proposals are enacted.

Sir Hector Monro: It will be for the new water and sewerage authorities to determine water and sewerage charges and the mechanics of payment. These will be set within the framework laid down in the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Bill and will be subject to the scrutiny and approval of the new Customers Council.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the 25 per cent. discount for single adult households will continue for water and sewerage services after local government reorganisation.

Sir Hector Monro: Levels of charge and decisions about discounts will be matters for the new water and sewerage authorities. Their charging schemes will be subject to consultation with and approval by the Customers Council.

Procurators Fiscal

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the procurators fiscal in Scotland, the districts which they cover and their administrative addresses.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is given as follows:

Procurator Fiscal	District	Address

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table:

EDUCATION

Special Educational Needs

15. Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the costs involved in the implementation of the code of practice on special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: The guidance in the code should not give rise to additional costs: it reflects current good practice in identifying and assessing special educational needs and should result in the more effective and efficient use of existing funding. The Government have introduced new grant for education and training support in 1994-95 to help schools develop special educational needs policies in the light of the code of practice.

17. Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what estimate he has made of the number of children who will require additional learning support including those who will require statements as a result of the implementation of the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs.

Mr. Forth: Paragraph 2:2 of the code of practice reflects the long-standing estimate that some 20 per cent. of pupils will have special educational needs at some stage of their school career. The purpose of the code of practice is to help ensure that these pupils' needs are appropriately met. Most children's needs will be met in mainstream schools without the making of a statement.

Dearing Report

16. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what has been the response of the teacher unions and associations following the publication of the Dearing report on the national curriculum and testing.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Dearing report was broadly welcomed by the teacher associations. Following its publication in January, all but one of the associations called off their boycott of the national tests.

National Curriculum

18. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the teaching of British history within the national curriculum.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend published his proposals for a revised history curriculum on 9 May. Those proposals put British history at the heart of the curriculum. The proposals are the subject of a public consultation which will last until the end of July. Following the consultation, he proposes to make an order which will require schools to teach the new history curriculum from September 1995.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received concerning the proposals for his study of English in the national curriculum.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has received seven letters on the proposals for English since they were published for consultation on 9 May. The consultation is being managed by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, and consultees have been asked to respond to the authority rather than to the Department. The authority will be advising me on the outcome of the consultation later in the year.

GCSE

19. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of young people achieved five or more GCSE passes at grades A to C last year; and what was the equivalent figure for 1989.

Mr. Robin Squire: Some 41 per cent. of 15-year-olds in England achieved five or more GCSEs at grade A to C in 1993, compared with 33 per cent. in 1989.

Nursery Education

20. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what research he has funded on the value of nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: This Department has not directly funded any research into the value of nursery education recently.

22. Mr. Ilsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received on improving the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received a large number of representations on nursery education in recent months.

28. Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list in order the 10 local education authorities that provide the highest number of places for nursery education for the under-fives per head of population and the 10 which provide the lowest number; and what plans he has for bringing the level of provision of the worst up to that of the best.

Mr. Robin Squire: The table shows the local education authority areas in England, which, in January 1993, had the highest and lowest participation rates for pupils under five in maintained nursery schools and nursery classes in maintained primary schools. In addition, many children under five are taught in infant classes in primary schools; these are not included in the figures given. Information about nursery places is not held centrally. My right hon. Friend has made it clear that we are looking at possible ways of extending the opportunities for children under five as resources allow and within our policy of promoting choice, diversity, quality and cost-effectiveness. This may thus incorporate all aspects of under-five provision and not simply be limited to maintained nursery schools and classes. We will announce our conclusions when we are ready to do so.

Secondary School Places

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether his Department proposes to end the allocation of secondary school places by random selection.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he does not consider random selection to be an appropriate way of allocating school places. It is, however, for local education authorities to determine arrangements for admission to county and voluntary controlled schools. I understand that Lancashire LEA has decided to consult parents and others on a proposal that the use of random selection for admission to schools in Burnley and Ormskirk be discontinued.

Gulbenkian Report

24. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what consideration he has given to the Gulbenkian report on discretionary awards.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend is still considering this report.

Truancy

25. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the tables on truancy published last year by his Department.

Mr. Forth: The Government attach particular importance to regular school attendance. The tables published in November 1993 showed that significant amounts of valuable learning time were being lost due to unauthorised absence. Rates of unauthorised absence also varied widely between individual LEAs and schools. In order to obtain the full picture on pupil absence we are extending the publication requirement in 1994 to include authorised as well as unauthorised absence. The publication of absence data is an important part of a school's accountability to parents and the wider community.

Primary School Overcrowding, Redbridge

26. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he next plans to visit the London borough of Redbridge to discuss primary school overcrowding.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

Student Support

27. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will introduce new measures to improve financial support for students in further and higher education.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend makes satisfactory arrangements to provide support through mandatory awards and student loans for most students domiciled in England and Wales on designated courses in higher education. Provision of support for other students in further and higher education is a matter for LEAs and other award-making bodies. Access funds are available for full-time students in particular financial difficulty.

Private Sector Finance

29. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to encourage the injection of private sector finance into state-funded education.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has established a task group to co-ordinate work to promote and monitor the expansion of opportunities for private finance in education. We shall be publishing an information pack designed to encourage wider investment, and are reviewing the possibility of further action.

Responsible Citizenship

30. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he is taking to ensure that schools nurture in their pupils an appreciation of responsible citizenship.

Mr. Forth: Schools have a statutory responsibility under section 1 of the Education Reform Act 1988 to promote pupils' spiritual, moral, cultural, mental and physical development, and to prepare them for the opportunities, responsibilities and experience of adult life.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many representations his Department has received from schools expressing concern that further education colleges are now encouraging 15 and 16-year-old school students to take A-levels in college rather than a school sixth form.

Mr. Boswell: The Department has received some representations from schoolteacher organisations and others about the general question of pupils transferring from schools to colleges in the FE sector. The Department has made it clear that we would expect pupils of compulsory school age to be admitted to FE colleges only exceptionally, where it was clearly justified in the individual case. The Department has also received representations from eight schools proposing that the requirement on schools to distribute information about local colleges to pupils in key stage 4 should be extended to include information about post-16 provision in neighbouring schools.

Parental Choice

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received regarding (a) parental choice and (b) appeal procedure in relation to (i) primary schools and (ii) secondary schools in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: A large number of representations are made to the Department each year about parental choice, school admissions and appeal procedures. Many are from individual parents seeking information or advice. Because of their varied nature, no record is kept of the total number of such approaches.

Graduates

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what have been the numbers of students graduating from (a) universities and (b) polytechnics in each of the last five years.

Mr. Boswell: The table below shows the number of first degree graduates from former universities Funding Council-funded universities, the Open university, former Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council-funded polytechnics—including Scottish central institutions—and FE and HE colleges in Great Britain in each of the last five academic years for which information is available.

Counselling Service

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is his Department's policy on establishing a confidential counselling service in all schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Teachers have a general pastoral responsibility for the welfare and well-being of their pupils. Schools need to work closely with a range of specialist support services which may be best placed to offer advice, information and counselling to individual school-age youngsters.

Pupil Reports

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of parents currently receive a written report on their child's progress at least once a year in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under the current reporting regulations schools in England are required to send a written report to all parents on their child's progress at least once in every school year.

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what information he has received from the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority about the number and proportion of schools withdrawing from this year's key stage 2 pilot tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The School Curriculum and Assessment Authority received a very favourable response from schools invited to take part in its technical and special educational needs pilot. Some 638 schools initially agreed to take part; 84 schools have subsequently withdrawn.

There was also an invitation to all schools to request copies of the key stage 2 test papers. Around three-quarters did so. There was no need for these schools to report whether they administered the tests.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many schools conducted 14-plus examinations in English and other subjects this year; how many refused to do so; what number of pupils and teachers were involved in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what information he has received from the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority about the proportion of schools at key stage 3 (a) administering SATs in 1994 and (b) reporting the results; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has received from the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority about the number of schools at key stage 3, which have (a) completed all 1994 SATs, (b) completed some 1994 SATs, (c) completed no 1994 SATs and (d) reported the results, where SATs have been taken; and if he will make a statement.

(3) what information he has received from the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority about the proportion of schools (a) administering this year's key stage 1 tests and (b) reporting the results; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is too early to say how many and what proportion of schools have and have not administered the key stage 1 and 3 tests. Early indications are that there has been significantly more testing in schools than last year.

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the value of the assets transferred from the public to the private sector incurred in the process of the privatisation of the Grant-Maintained Schools Centre.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Grant-Maintained Schools Centre Ltd. has always been a private company, limited by guarantee. Until March 1994 it received grant from the Department for specific purposes. From 1 April 1994 the Grant Maintained Schools Foundation Ltd., a non-profit making company limited by guarantee, has taken over from the centre the activities relating to the provision of factual information and advice to schools considering grant-maintained status; and the foundation is now grant-aided by the Department. The Centre, as a private sector company, will be continuing its other activities on a purely commercial basis. No assets were transferred from the public to the private sector as a consequence of these changes.

Conditions attached to previous grant aid to the GMSC Ltd., and to current grants to the GMSF Ltd., require that the proceeds from the disposal of any assets which were purchased from public funds should be surrendered to the Exchequer.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money was spent by his Department and the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation (a) on literature designed to provide information on grant-maintained status, (b) on advertisements promoting the availability of such information and (c) on conferences for head teachers and governors in each month since May 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: Figures for expenditure by the Department on these three areas of activity are not readily available on a month-by-month basis. Nor would they provide a reliable indication of activity in any particular month, because of time lags in the receipt of invoices and in payments.

The available data on the Department's spending on information about grant-maintained status is:

	1993-94 £	[1]1994-95 £
Publications	297,913	38,495
Advertising	207,000	—
Conferences	309,492	34,532

[1] To end May.

The Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation started operations on 1 April. By the end of May it had not incurred any expenditure on publications, advertising or conferences.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many opt-out ballots were held in each month since May 1993; how many schools voted to become grant-maintained; and how many voted to remain with the local education authority in each month.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out below.

Parental ballots on grant-maintained status

Secondary Schools

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many local education authorities in England allow secondary school allocation to be determined by random selection.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information is not held centrally. Circular 6/93, which gives guidance on admission arrangements, underlines the Secretary of State's view that it is not appropriate to determine admission by lot in the event that a school is oversubscribed.

Teacher Training Agency

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what (a) personal and (b) professional specifications need to be met by shortlisted applicants for the post of chief executive of the Teacher Training Agency.

Mr. Robin Squire: The published advertisement for the chief executive of the Teacher Training Agency sets out the general requirements of the post. The decision as to which candidates should be placed on the shortlist will be based on an assessment by executive search consultants of the relevant personal qualities and experience of individual applications.

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money has been budgeted for the retention of a recruitment agency to advise on the appointments of (a) a chief executive and (b) other members of the Teacher Training Agency.

Mr. Robin Squire: The amount of money which has been budgeted for the retention of a recruitment agency to advise on the appointment of a chief executive is £24,000.

We do not intend to use a recruitment agency to assist with the appointment of the remaining members of the board.

Psychologists

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is his assessment of the adequacy of the supply of educational psychologists; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he intends to issue guidelines to local education authorities about minimum staffing levels for educational psychology services based on the Warnock report recommendations of 1978;

(3) what measures he will take to reduce waiting lists for children to be seen by educational psychologists.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to him on 19 and 24 May Official Report, columns 547 and 138 respectively. My right hon. Friend has seen no evidence to suggest that there are unacceptable delays for children waiting to be seen by educational psychologists. Local education authorities are responsible for determining the staffing levels of their educational psychology services in order to fulfil their statutory responsibilities. The number of educational psychologists has increased by 31 per cent. since 1985.

Parents (Complaints)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many complaints by parents about schools have been investigated by the local government ombudsman in each of the last five years; and how many of those complaints concerned (a) maintained or local authority-maintained schools, (b) voluntary aided and (c) grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not held by the Department. The annual report of the local government ombudsmen for 1992-93 notes that 19 investigation reports in that year concerned education.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list for each of the last five years the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is listed.

Honest Broker Service

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many education authorities and schools have established an independent honest broker service for parents and pupils, along the lines of that established by the London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not held centrally.

Admissions and Exclusions Appeal Committees

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many lay members have been appointed to admissions and exclusions appeal committees in England and Wales from January 1994 under the provisions of the Education Act 1993.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the number of lay members who have been appointed to appeal committees in England is not collected by the Department. The constitution of appeal committees is the responsibility of the local education authorities in the case of county and controlled schools, and the governing bodies in the case of voluntary-aided, special agreement and self-governing—grant-maintained—schools.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has responsibility for education matters in Wales.

Student Awards

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether there is any intention to delegate funding for discretionary awards to the Further Education Funding Council or to colleges.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend is considering what, if any, changes should be made to the administration of discretionary awards in the light of the report on discretionary award provision published by the Gulbenkian Foundation on 8 April. Any plans to change the current arrangements would be announced to Parliament at the appropriate time.

Adult Training

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to discuss with the Department of Employment ways of making it possible for adults to study towards the improvement of their employment prospects.

Mr. Boswell: The Government's proposals for increasing participation in education and training were set out in the White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" published on 24 May. The Department for Education has regular discussions with the Employment Department about matters of mutual interest, including access of adults to education and training to improve their employment prospects.

Religious Education

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the minimum period for the teaching of a non-Christian religion at key stage 1; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what are the statutory requirements in respect of the teaching of non-Christian faiths by the age of 11 years.

Mr. Robin Squire: The law does not specify statutory minimum periods to be devoted to the teaching of individual religions. Section 8(3) of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires a locally agreed syllabus to > "reflect the fact that the religious traditions of Great Britain are in the main Christian, whilst taking account of the other principal religions represented in Great Britain".

A syllabus which contained only Christianity for a whole key stage would not fully meet this requirement, but this does not mean that each of the principal religions must be taught in equal depth or at each key stage. In the syllabus as a whole and at each key stage, the relative content devoted to Christianity should predominate. The precise balance between Christianity and other religions in an individual syllabus is for the local agreed syllabus conference to decide in the light of the legal requirements, and taking into account both the local and national position.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what steps he has taken to ensure that the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority consults parents on their proposals for national model syllabuses for religious education.

Mr. Robin Squire: The School Curriculum and Assessment Authority consulted the National Confederation of Parent Teacher Associations as part of its wide consultation on the draft model syllabuses, published in January. Final versions of the models will be published in July.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish details of the representations he has received expressing concern about proposals by the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority in relation to compulsory religious education, in respect of the teaching of non-Christian faiths to primary age school children.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received about 200 letters on that subject. The number of religions in addition to Christianity that should be covered during the primary phase was one of the issues on which the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority specifically sought comments during consultation on its model syllabuses for religious education. The authority is considering the results of that consultation and will publish final versions of the models in July.

Ecological Subjects

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what guidance he gives to schools on the teaching of ecological subjects.

Mr. Robin Squire: The national curriculum is the focus for teaching and learning in schools. Ecological questions are addressed through subjects such as science, technology and geography. My right hon. Friend's priority is to revise the national curriculum requirements, and he has no plans to publish additional guidance on ecological matters specifically.

Sex Education Circular

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the status of the paragraphs 20 and 22 of the sex education circular of 11 February omitted from the new circular.

Mr. Forth: Circular 11/87 has been superseded by circular 5/94 which explains the provisions of the Education Act 1993 in relation to sex education in maintained schools in England, and offers guidance to local education authorities and schools on implementation. Circular 5/94 sets out schools' legal obligations, including the requirement that sex education must encourage due regard to moral considerations and the value of family life and contains a summary of the law on sexual behaviour.

Technology Colleges

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the grant-maintained and voluntary aided schools in Essex that applied to become technology colleges and set out for each of the schools for which an application was approved (a) the specific, quantifiable performance indicators, set out by the school in support of its application, which were used as a basis for determining the approval of the application, (b) the value of the additional grants that the technology college will receive from the Department for Education, or other sources of public funds, by way of the initial capital grant, enhanced capital formula allocation, and additional revenue funding and (c) the value of the financial contribution to be made by sponsors from industry and commerce to the initial establishment of the technology college and to the annual cost of its operations.

Mr. Robin Squire: Three schools in Essex have submitted full applications to become technology colleges and have been approved to operate as technology colleges from 1 September 1994. They are Chalvedon school, Basildon; the Philip Morant school, Colchester; and Saffron Walden high school, Saffron Walden. Other schools are at varying stages in preparing their applications.

Each approved technology college's plan includes one or more targets relating to increased curriculum provision in the specialist subjects of technology, science and mathematics; one or more targets relating to increased take-up of such provision; and one or more targets relating to improved test and examination attainment in these subjects. Each has been invited to submit a bid for a capital project which involves a capital grant of up to £100,000; and a bid for additional annual grant, at the rate of £60 per pupil in 1994-95, for support, equipment and training for the teaching of technology, science and mathematics.

Each of the three schools has been pledged sponsorship from industry and commerce of some £100,000 to be made available in the school's first year of operation as a technology college. Additional contributions from sponsors to the annual cost of operation of a technology college are a matter for the schools and their sponsors.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the impact of the reduction in section 11 expenditure on access to, and participation in, the national curriculum of children from ethnic minorities in Brent, Hackney, Redbridge, Avon, Buckinghamshire, Cleveland, Hertfordshire, Birmingham, Lancashire and Wolverhampton.

Mr. Robin Squire: Decisions on the funding of the education of their pupils, including those from ethnic minority groups, are primarily for individual schools and local education authorities. Maintained schools have a statutory duty to deliver the national curriculum as a basic entitlement for all pupils, whatever their background. My right hon. Friend will continue to monitor, through the Office of Standards in Education, the standard of educational provision in all maintained schools, including provision for those pupils for whom English is not their first language. Additional support for the latter category through section 11 grants and the single regeneration budget are matters for, respectively, my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Forth: The Department now advises respondents to all public consultation documents that their responses may be made public unless they specifically request confidentiality.

School Transport (Seatbelts)

Ms Whalley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what responses he has made to the Secretary of State for Transport in respect of the (i) fitting of seat belts to school mini-buses and for school journeys and (ii) the end of the three-to-a-seat rule.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is in close touch with the Secretary of State for Transport.

Clinical Academic Staff

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what steps he intends to take to reduce the delays arising in the translation of the Doctors and Dentists Review Body award, paid to doctors each year on 1 April, to clinical academic staff;

(2) what steps he is taking to improve morale and career prospects within academic medicine in order to ensure the continued recruitment, retention and motivation of clinical academic staff of the necessary calibre;

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that clinical academic staff receive the same pay awards for 1994 as their national health service counterparts.

Mr. Boswell: The negotiation of pay awards for clinical academic staff is a matter for the university employers, not for my right hon. Friend. It is also for them as employers to decide how best to recruit, retain and motivate their clinical academic staff.

Bradford Muslim Girls School

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received, during the consultation period, following the application by the Bradford Muslim girls community high school to be granted voluntary aided status; how many representations (a) supported the application and (b) opposed the application; what meetings his officials have had with representatives of the school to discuss the application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations. Officials are to meet representatives of the school on 20 June. On the question of a statement on the proposals, I refer the hon. Member for Bradford, West to replies I gave on 31 January, Official Report, column 522 and 23 May, Official Report, column 46.

Disabled People

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to promote progress in making schools and other places of learning accessible, on a reasonable basis, to disabled people.

Mr. Forth: The Education (Special Educational Needs) (Information) Regulations 1994 require schools to publish, by 1 August 1995, information about their SEN policies, including information about facilities which assist access by pupils who are disabled. Guidance as to how schools might address that requirement is set out in paragraphs 37-39 of circular 6/94—"The Organisation of Special Educational Provision"—which draws attention to the desirability of a spectrum of mainstream schools being fully accessible to the disabled.

Regulations recently made under section 21 of the Education Act 1993 require local education authorities and the Funding Agency for Schools, where it has relevant planning responsibilities, to provide each other and the Secretary of State with information on access to schools for pupils in wheelchairs biennially starting in 1995.

We have promoted, through guidance to the Further and the Higher Education Funding Councils, the development of provision for students with learning difficulties and disabilities. Both the funding councils have in hand initiatives designed to improve access for these students.

Specialist Teacher Assistants

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many bids for training specialist teacher assistants his Department has received from (a) higher education institutions, (b) individual schools, (c) consortia of schools and (d) local education authorities.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received a total of 137 bids, of which 69 fall within the categories mentioned, as follows:

	Number
(a) higher education institutions	44
(b) individual schools	1
(c) consortia of schools	0
(d) local education authorities	24

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Forth: Detailed records of job offers reported and applications made by staff under the requirements of the business appointment rules have been maintained by the Department since 1990. The information requested is given in the table. Twelve of the 14 applications reported in 1990 and 1991 came from members of Her Majesty's inspectorate.

Job offers reported	Grades concerned	Contract or procurement work	Other sections
1990
1	Grade 3 or above	No	Yes
8	Below grade 3	No	Yes
All above reports were followed by applications to join the company concerned.
1991
5	Below grade 3	No	Yes
Four of the above reports were followed by applications to join the company concerned.
1992
No record of any reported job offers.
1993
2	Grade 3 or above	No	Yes
Both of the above reports were followed by applications to join the company 1994
1	Grade 3 or above	No	Yes
The above report was followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Publications

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which circulars, orders or regulations set out in the timetable for Department of Education publications have not been published or made by the due date; what was the due date in each case; when was the date of publication or making of the order or regulation; and, in respect of those still outstanding, when they are expected to be made.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Legislation came into force on the dates originally anticipated in the Education Act 1993 irrespective of any slippage in publication of circulars or other publications. Publication dates for documents which missed the deadline set out in the "Education Act 1993: Timetable of DFE publications" are as described in the list:

Title	Planned publication date	Actual or expected publication date

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (AIDS)

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made as to the need for condoms to be supplied to prisoners known to be at risk of contracting or spreading the HIV virus.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what assessment he has made as to the need for condoms to be supplied to prisoners known to be at risk of contracting or spreading the HIV virus.

The Prison Service AIDS Advisory Committee has recently completed a review of all aspects of HIV in prisons including measures which need to be taken to prevent the spread of HIV infection amongst the prison population. The report of this review is now being considered. In addition the Prison Service has commissioned a study currently being carried out by the Institute of Psychiatry and the National AIDS Counselling Training Unit into risk behaviours amongst prisoners. The results of this study will be available in January 1995.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research is currently being conducted into the spread or prevalence of HIV and AIDS among prisoners; and when he expects this research to be concluded.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what research is currently being conducted into the spread or prevalence of HIV and AIDS amongst prisoners.

A pilot feasibility study into the prevalence of HIV amongst prisoners has recently been completed. This study was an extension of the Public Health Laboratory Service's series of unlinked anonymised HIV prevalence studies being carried out elsewhere in the community. The aim of the study was to ascertain whether it was possible to persuade prisoners to provide anonymously a sample of saliva for HIV testing and to answer a short questionnaire to determine the possible route of transmission. It is hoped that the results of the study will be available shortly.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisons have (a) full-time and (b) part-time HIV counsellors; and for how many hours each week, by institution.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from R. Tilt to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about Prison Service HIV counsellors.

The Prison Service completed, in 1993, a programme of education and training of selected staff so as to provide in each establishment at least two centrally trained HIV counsellors. By the end of 1993, 200 prison staff had been trained in HIV counselling based on the World Health Organisation model for training in HIV counselling, as adapted by the Prison Service AIDS Advisory Committee for prisons in England and Wales. In addition, the Prison Service has 550 centrally trained HIV care and support officers. These officers, of whom there are also at least two in each establishment, have undergone a four day training course in HIV awareness. They are easily contacted by prison inmates who may have concerns about HIV, and who can then be referred to the internal HIV counsellors or external HIV counsellors if this is deemed necessary.

There are no full-time HIV prison counsellors. All Prison Service HIV counsellors and care and support officers combine this work with other responsibilities—they are nurses, health care officers, discipline officers, psychologists, chaplains, probation officers, governors and prison medical officers.

Prisoners with HIV infection who are well, are expected to be seen by prison medical officers at least on a three monthly basis for full clinical and laboratory monitoring of their state of health. Prisoners with HIV infection may of course request to see a care and support officer, HIV counsellor and/or a prison medical officer whenever they feel this is necessary. It is not therefore possible to say how much HIV counselling by hours per week each prisoner with HIV infection receives.

Young Offenders

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made as to the suitability of the wing allocated for young offenders in HM prison Gloucester for offenders of this type.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Mr. Robert Maclennan, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the suitability of the wing allocated for young offenders in Gloucester prison.

Gloucester prison is a local prison and may hold prisoners of all classifications, including young prisoners. The 81 cells in C wing, which now hold young prisoners were certified suitable for this purpose by the Area Manager.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average daily number of juveniles remanded in custody in (a) March and (b) April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the average daily number of juveniles remanded into custody in (a) March and (b) April.

During both March and April provisional information indicates that on average five juveniles, aged 15 to 16, a day were received on remand into a Prison Service establishment in England and Wales.

Immigration

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the United Kingdom will have the discretion to admit a person whose name is on the persona non grata list envisaged in the draft regulation for a common visa list when there are strong compassionate or other reasons justifying admission.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under article 12 of the draft external frontiers convention a member state would have discretion to admit a person who was on the joint list of inadmissible persons established under article 10 of the convention, on humanitarian grounds, in the national interest or by reason of international commitments. Entry given in such circumstances would, however, be restricted solely to the territory of the member state concerned and there would be a duty to inform other member states of the decision taken.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether an unemployed Irish national married to a non-European Economic Area spouse will be issued with a residence permit automatically, by virtue of rights to settle under the provisions of the common travel area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. Any application made by an Irish national for a residence permit under the provisions of EC law will be dealt with in accordance with the Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994, in the same way as an application from a national of any other European Economic Area state. However, Irish nationals will continue to be regarded as settled here under domestic immigration law.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances the United Kingdom will have the discretion to refuse entry to a person who has been granted a European visa; and what rights of appeal or redress will apply.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under the draft external frontiers convention a person holding a uniform visa would not require a United Kingdom national visa to gain entry to the country, but possession of a uniform visa would not entitle the holder to admission. Refusal of admission to a person holding a uniform visa would not attract a right of appeal since uniform visas will be available only for short stays.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for primary legislation to remove the benefits of the common travel area residence status from Irish nationals whose legal basis for residence is held to be that of European Economic Area law.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people will know if their names have been placed on the persona non grata list envisaged in the draft regulation on a common visa list; whether all countries will have common criteria for placing people on this list; whether these criteria will be made public; and in what circumstances names will be removed from the list.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A joint list of persons to be refused entry to member states of the European Union is provided for in article 10 of the draft external frontiers convention. Article 10.3 sets out the criteria for the inclusion of persons on the list. There has not yet been any agreement on the detailed rules for the application of these criteria, which remain a matter for discussion between member states. It may not be either practicable or in certain cases desirable to introduce an obligation to inform a person of his inclusion on the list. The text of the detailed rules referred to above is likely to fall within the criteria for deposit in both Houses in accordance with the scrutiny arrangements for title VI matters. It will be for individual member states to remove from the list names which they themselves have included, as circumstances change.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he had with the Irish authorities about the proposal that Irish citizens with non-European Economic Area spouses will need to apply for residence permits in order that their spouses may benefit from EEA rights.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Irish authorities have been kept closely informed of the provisions of the draft Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994 under which the non-EEA dependants of Irish nationals will benefit from EC rights of residence in the same way as the non-EEA dependants of other EEA nationals.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it will be his practice that non-European Economic Area national children and young people who are granted EEA family permits will continue to be entitled to them after they pass the age of 21 years, or cease to be dependent, and that they will be granted settlement along with the EEA family member on whom their rights depend.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under the provisions of the Immigration (European Economic Area) Order 1994, non-EEA dependent children of EEA nationals who are exercising rights of residence in the United Kingdom may reside here on the same basis, irrespective of age. However, those children of EEA nationals who pass the age of 21 and cease to be dependent will need to qualify on their own account if they wish to remain in the United Kingdom, unless they have already been granted settlement in line with the EEA national on whom they were at the time dependent.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many migrant citizens of the European Union or persons purporting to be such there are in each of the past five years whose identify card or passport has been investigated either on the instigation of the immigration service or on the instigation of officials of his Department in order to establish the validity or genuineness of the document; in how many cases such documents were considered to be genuine and applying to the applicant; in how many cases it was concluded that this was not the case; if he will break down the figure by nationality; and in cases where the document was rejected, what right of appeal was offered to the applicant.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of falsified, counterfeit or fraudulently obtained EC documents and those used by impostors detected at United Kingdom ports and airports of entry in each of the last three years. The nationality shown is that which the holder of the document purported to be.

The same rights of appeal are available to a person in possession of a forged or falsified passport who is refused leave to enter the United Kingdom or removed as an illegal entrant as to those refused leave or removed in other circumstances.

Prisoners

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date in March the number of prisoners in England and Wales being held three to a cell reached zero; on what dates since then prisoners have been held three to a cell, and at which prisons; and how many prisoners have been held three to a cell on each occasion.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about prisoners sharing three to a cell.

This information is submitted routinely by establishments on the last Friday of each month, and was collected exceptionally on 31 March 1994, the end of our financial year.

On Friday 25 March 1994 there were twenty-four prisoners sharing three to a cell designed for one at Leicester prison. On Thursday 31 March 1994 and Friday 29 April 1994 there were no prisoners sharing three to a cell designed for one.

Escapees

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many escapes there were from Group 4 Court Escort Services during 1993-94.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of escapes from Group 4 escorts in the East Midlands and Humberside.

Between the commencement of the service on 5 April 1993 and 31 May 1994, there have been a total of 31 escapes, excluding 19 prisoners immediately recaptured. The Group 4 court escort and custody service covers work previously undertaken by both the prison and police services within the contract area. In the first year of operation Group 4 carried out a total of 100,656 prisoner movements and the escape statistics should be seen in that context.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the budget allocations for section 11 grants for 1993-94 and 1994-95; if he will list the numbers of section 11 posts reported to his Department as having been made redundant; and how many of those redundant posts were held by members of ethnic minorities in Brent, Hackney, Redbridge, Avon, Buckinghamshire, Cleveland, Hertfordshire, Birmingham, Lancashire and Wolverhampton.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Available information is shown in the table.

Previously grant has been paid as a proportion of actual salary costs incurred. The first figure shows the amount of grant payable in relation to expenditure reported by the authority or institution as having been incurred during 1993-94. The second figure is the budget allocation which has been notified to the authority or institution in relation to its expenditure in 1994-95, under new arrangements for the payment of grant. The other two columns show numbers of posts of which formal notification had been received from an authority or institution by 10 June that, with effect from April 1994 or Septemberr 1994 respectively, they would no longer form part of a project attracting section 11 grant. Information is not held centrally as to particular arrangements for the management of a reduction in the number of posts, or as to the ethnic background of postholders.

[1] Information, or further information, is awaited from the authority or institution.

[2] It is understood that functions previously funded under section 11 will continue under the authority's mainstream funding.

[3] Section 11 project approved only until 31 March 1994.

[4] Separate project not established until 1 April 1994.

[5] The table does not include schools with new project proposals which are in the process of consideration, or where a budget allocation figure for 1994-95 has not yet been finally notified.

Local Authority Elections

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to collect centrally and arrange for the official publication of the results of all local authority elections and by-elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Results of local authority elections outside London are collected by the local government chronicle elections centre, university of Plymouth, and published in the local elections handbook series. Electoral data for London boroughs are collected and published by the London Research Centre. It would not be an effective use of resources for the Home Office to duplicate the work of either the university of Plymouth or the LRC.

The Home Office collects information on the number and turnout in by-elections. This is published annually in "Social Trends" and the Central Statistical Office's "Annual Abstract of Statistics". We do not currently publish the results of individual by-elections and there are no plans to do so.

Homicide

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales were serving sentences for homicide at the latest available date, given (a) as an absolute number and (b) as a percentage of the prison population, and broken down by gender.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking how many prisoners in England and Wales were serving sentences for homicide at the latest available date, given (a) as an absolute and (b) as a percentage of the prison population, and broken down by gender.

The latest available provisional information is for 31 March 1994. On that date some 3,600 persons in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for whom an offence was recorded were serving sentences for murder, attempted murder, making threats to kill, conspire/aid/incite murder, manslaughter, infanticide, death by reckless driving and "other" homicides. They accounted for 11 per cent. of the sentenced prison population for whom an offence was recorded. The corresponding proportion for males was 11 per cent. and for females 12 per cent.

Restraint Use

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times restraints were used on (a) prison inmates and (b) persons in police custody during 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Provisional information for 1993 shows that there were 111 applications of restraints under rule 46 of the Prison Rules 1964 and rule 49 of the Young Offender Institution Rules 1988 in Prison Service establishments. Those applications cover the use of canvas jackets, body belts, handcuffs and ankle straps but do not include the use of protective rooms and special cells. It also does not cover the use of restraints while prisoners are being escorted between Prison Service establishments or between cells to the governor's office within an establishment, matters on which information is not collected centrally.

No information is collected centrally on those held in police custody on whom restraints are used.

Prison Staff Ratios

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the ratio of staff to prisoners at each prison in England and Wales at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about staff to prisoner ratios in the Prison Service.

A table showing the ratios of staff of all grades to prisoners at each prison, as at 25 May, has been placed in the House of Commons library.

Prison Population

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of (a) remand and (b) sentenced male prisoners were aged (i) 16 and under, (ii) 17 to 21 inclusive, (iii) 22 to 24 inclusive, and (iv) over 24 years at the latest available date;

(2) what percentage of (a) remand and (b) sentenced female prisoners were aged (i) 16 and under, (ii) 17 to 21 inclusive, (iii) 22 to 24 inclusive and (iv) over 24 years at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answers 26 May 1994]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions asking what percentage of (a) remand and (b) sentenced male and female prisoners were aged (i) 16 and under, (ii) 17 to 21 inclusive, (iii) 22 to 24 inclusive and (iv) over 24 years at the latest available date.

The latest available provisional information is for the prison population in Prison Service establishments on 31 March 1994 and is given in the attached tables.

[1] Prisoners held in police cells are included in both the total prison population and included with the remand and sentenced populations.

[2] Non-criminal prisoners are included in the total prison population but are excluded from both the remand and sentenced.

Remand Prisoners

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time spent on remand by (a) males and (b) females remanded into custody in 1993.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. Lewis to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what was the average time spent on remand by (a) males and (b) females remanded into custody in 1993.

The available information is estimated from the figures for the population and receptions of untried prisoners in 1993. For males the average time served as an untried prisoner was estimated as 55 days and for females 39 days.

Prisoners (Time Served)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average amount of time served by (a) male and (b) female prisoners released from prison in England and Wales in each year since 1980.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 14 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the average amount of time served by (a) male and (b) female prisoners released from prison in England and Wales in each year since 1980.

Information on the average time served in custody is published in successive volumes of "Prison Statistics, England and Wales" (Tables 3.15, 4.15 and 5.15 of the 1991 edition, Cm 2157), copies of which are available in the Library of the House. I attach a table giving the available information. Information for 1992 will be published in "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1992" which is to be published this month. I regret that incomplete information is available before 1988.

TRANSPORT

Security

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the use of private detective agencies and security companies by his Department.

Mr. Key: Private detective agencies are principally used by the Department to assist with prosecutions for failure to pay vehicle excise duty, claims for damage to roads and actions against trespassers. Other uses include tracing former employees who inadvertently have been overpaid, and inquiring into complaints by the public about an employee.

Security companies are used by the Department to provide a building custody service at some locations; for the collection and conveyance of cash for banking; for the protection of property required for road schemes; and for security advice and training.

Private Members' Bills

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions since April 1992 Ministers from his Department have (a) requested parliamentary counsel to assist in preparing amendments to private Members' Bills on behalf of other private Members and (b) authorised officials to instruct parliamentary counsel to prepare amendments which were subsequently passed to private Members.

Mr. Norris: Parliamentary counsel drafts not on behalf of private Members but on the instructions of Departments acting on the authority of Ministers.

With the authority of Ministers, amendments were drafted by parliamentary counsel on instructions from my Department and subsequently passed to private Members in respect of the Merchant Shipping (Registration of Ships) etc. Act 1993 and the Merchant Shipping (Salvage & Pollution) Bill.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was spent in each of the last two financial years on Vehicle Inspectorate enforcement.

Mr. Key: Some £22,427,000 was spent on Vehicle Inspectorate enforcement in 1992-93. For 1993-94, the forecast outturn spend is £22,109,000.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the budget set for Vehicle Inspectorate enforcement for this financial year.

Mr. Key: The answer is £22,021,000.

Efficiency Savings

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the efficiency targets set for each executive agency within this Department for the next two years.

Mr. MacGregor: My reply of 29 April Official Report, column 385 and that of my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic of 12 April, Official Report, column 83, set out the key targets, including efficiency targets, which I have set the executive agencies in my Department for the year 1994-95. I have also set the Department, including the agencies, a requirement to make a 20 per cent. improvement in efficiency with the target of achieving it over the two years beginning 1 April 1994.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what efficiency savings his Department will make this financial year; and what are the Department's efficiency savings targets for the next financial year.

Mr. John MacGregor: As I explained in my reply of 9 May to the hon. Member, Official Report, column 58, I have set my Department the requirement that it deliver a 20 per cent. efficiency saving and the target of securing this by 31 March 1996. Plans for delivering this saving are still being formulated. It is, therefore, too early to say how much of the saving will be achieved in 1994-95 and how much in 1995-96. It is not my intention to set separate targets for the two financial years.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any Vehicle Inspectorate testing stations will be closed because of the Department's target of 20 per cent. efficiency savings over the next two years.

Mr. Robert Key: There are no plans for closures of the Vehicle Inspectorate's testing stations. The network will be kept under review in the light of customer demand and the availability of suitable alternative facilities. Proposals for achieving the 20 per cent. efficiency savings required by my right hon. Friend have yet to be determined and considered by Ministers.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any driving test centres in addition to the 22 test centre closures recently announced will be closed as a result of the Department's target to make 20 per cent. efficiency savings over the next two years.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend announced on 9 May that he was requiring the Department to make an efficiency gain of 20 per cent. with the target of achieving it over the next two years. The chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency has been asked to submit proposals to meet this remit, and my right hon. Friend will be considering these in due course. No decisions have been reached.

Pregnant Workers Directive

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department has taken to comply with the provisions of EC pregnant workers directive 92/85.

Mr. Steven Norris: The Department of Transport's maternity leave arrangements satisfy the maternity provision of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993, which give effect to the corresponding articles of the directive. The health and safety provisions of EC directive 92/85, which are to be covered by an amendment to the health and safety at work regulations, will also be fully implemented by the Department by the required date.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the last five years the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) CSL, (d) Prime, (e) Capita (f) Shreeveport, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Price Waterhouse and (k) Ernst & Young to his Department.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the table.

Departmental Costs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a breakdown of the running costs for his Department for the financial year 1993-94 into (a) staffing costs, (b) accommodation, (c) consultants' fees, (d) IT purchases, (e) stationery, (f) works and maintenance and (g) other.

Mr. MacGregor: The final outturn figures of my Department's running costs for the financial year 1993-94 will be made available shortly by the accounting officer, in the appropriation accounts. Provisional expenditure for the Department's running costs, including the gross costs of executive agencies that operate on a net running cost basis —the Driving Standards Agency, the Transport Research Laboratory and the Vehicle Certification Agency—and the Vehicle Inspectorate, which is a trading fund, in the breakdown requested is as follows:

(a) Staffing costs	290·601
(b) Accommodation	61·741
(c) Consultants' fees	6·299
(d) IT purchases	21·621
(e) Stationery	6·439
(f) Works and maintenance	5·007
(g) Other	147·496

London Underground

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) under what criteria the decision was taken to reduce the trigger for redress on the London underground; and what plans there are for further reductions;

(2) how much compensation has been paid from the date that the trigger for redress on the London underground was reduced to 15 minutes; and to how many commuters it has been paid;

(3) how much compensation was paid out in refund vouchers during the period that the trigger for redress on the London underground stood at 20 minutes; and to how many commuters it was paid.

Mr. Norris: The decision to reduce the trigger for redress was taken by London Underground Ltd., with the support of the Government, in order to provide those using the network with a more effective right of redress. I understand that LUL has no current plans for further reductions.

London Underground paid out £208,283·60 in compensation in respect of 71,757 claims during the period when the trigger for redress stood at 20 minutes.

London Underground has so far paid out £274,533·70 in compensation in respect of 124,220 claims since the trigger for redress was reduced to 15 minutes.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. Norris: Paragraph 3(ii) of the code of practice requires Departments to publish or otherwise make available their guidance on dealings with the public. On 7 April 1994, the Department of Transport circulated a departmental notice to all staff, advising them that all guidance on dealings with the public—including local rules and guidelines—should be made available for public inspection in local offices. The Department therefore fulfilled its obligations under paragraph 3(ii) of the code on 7 April 1994, without any significant delay.

Piggyback Consortium

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he saw the final report of the Piggyback Consortium; and what assessment he has made of it.

Mr. Freeman: I welcome this report, which the consortium presented to me on 20 April. I would like to see it take the work forward to the next stage.

Bus and Coach Safety

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter sent to him by Directorates-General VII of the European Commission regarding legislation to implement stricter safety laws for buses and coaches.

Mr. Key: I am not aware of any letter sent to my right hon. Friend by DG VII. However, I have arranged for a copy of a press notice issued by DG VII on 11 November 1993 to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to improve transport safety through the extended use of seat belts.

Mr. Key: I have to hand the report of the review of the technical and cost implications of fitting seat belts to all seats in minibuses and coaches. I hope to be able to announce the conclusions shortly.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much will be spent by his Department on research into bus and coach safety in 1994-95; and how much has been spent so far in 1994-95.

Mr. Key: Some £360,000 has been allocated to bus and coach research in 1994-95. The projects have not yet started.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research information he has on the relative risks of coach travel in (a) exposed seats and (b) positions with a high back in front (i) with a seat belt and (ii) without a belt.

Mr. Key: There is no research permitting direct comparison of the relative risks associated with these features. However, coach and car accident data taken with seat belt research concentrated primarily on cars can tell us much about the potential benefits of belts, both lap and three-point, in coaches. There is strong evidence that ejection from coaches, particularly in roll-over accidents, accounts for a significant proportion of fatalities. Seat belts help in such accidents. Ejection cannot, however, be prevented by the use of high backed seats.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will invoke article 36(A) of the treaty of Rome on the grounds of health and safety to introduce legislation requiring United Kingdom registered coaches and minibuses to be fitted with seat belts.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. Such vehicles can already, where appropriate, be fitted with seat belts.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he expects to complete his Department's inquiry into the fitting of seat belts in coaches and minibuses; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to announce the conclusions of the inquiry into the cost and technical aspects of fitting seat belts to coaches and minibuses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: My right hon. Friend now has the report to hand and hopes to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Railway Pensions

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances a railway employee transferring from one company to another, but remaining in membership of the railway pension scheme, would receive pension benefits that are less favourable than would have been accrued prior to railway privatisation.

Mr. Freeman: Where the transfer is compulsory, the employee's pension benefits will be protected in full. We have agreed that where an employee who has the right under article 11 of the Railway Pensions (Protection and Designation of Schemes) Order 1994 to remain in the railways pension scheme moves voluntarily to another section within the scheme, there will be automatic credit of the same number of "pension years" provided that his pensionable salary is not increased on transfer by more than 7·5 per cent. A greater figure may be agreed between the trustees and the new employer, and in normal circumstances we would expect them to be able to increase this to around 10 per cent. The new employer may pay into the scheme to augment his benefits. In the few other cases, there may be a credit of fewer years, but this will depend on individual circumstances.

Spain-Morocco Ferry Service

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 55, if he will make a statement on the timetable for the infraction proceedings.

Mr. Norris: The timetable for infraction proceedings is a matter for the European Commission. We understand that the Commission intends to issue an article 169 letter to Spain in this case shortly.

Rail Season Tickets (Extension)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from what date British Rail adopted the policy of offering an extension to season tickets in recognition of periods when there was no effective service; and what has been the cost of this policy to date.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail introduced season ticket extensions more than 20 years ago. The cost of this policy is not separately identified by British Rail.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport under what circumstances other than the absence of an effective service during periods of strike action British Rail would extend a season ticket.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail will extend the validity of season tickets for days when it is unable to offer an effective train service or offer an alternative service.

Anti-fouling Paint

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what present view he has of the performance advantages of TBT coatings over tin-free coatings for anti-fouling paint on ships; and if he will place the technical justification for that view in the Library;

(2) what expenditures were incurred on the investigation of anti-fouling paints carried out for the International Maritime Organisation.

Mr. Norris: Research funded by the Department's Marine Safety Agency into the use of triorganotin compounds in anti-fouling paints indicates that the performance gap between TBT-based and modern tin-free coatings has narrowed. A copy of the research report "Critical Review of Current and Future Marine Antifouling Coatings" by Lloyd's Register Engineering Services will be placed in the Library. The cost of this research was £21,362.

Ports

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has in respect of port policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom Government's policies for our commercial ports over the past decade and more have reflected our broad policies to promote the encouragement of choice and competition, to allow transport to operate as far as possible in an unrestricted market, with intervention limited to areas such as safety and environmental issues. These policies will be continued.

The Government's ports strategy has enabled the United Kingdom ports industry to take full advantage of commercial opportunities, improvements in productivity and efficiency, and be in the forefront of technological progress. Privatisation has achieved major benefits in terms of reduced costs, increased productivity and improved service to the consumer and the user.

I have every confidence that our policies will provide the basis for further successful development of the ports industry; in particular, the Government believe that the future of a number of the remaining trust ports should be within the private sector.

Newly Qualified Drivers

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to discourage dangerous driving by newly qualified drivers.

Mr. Key: We are taking forward the measures announced by my right hon. Friend on 9 February, Official Report, columns 270-71. We are developing road safety education material for the 16-plus age group in schools and colleges, a scheme for post-test driver training linked to lower insurance premiums, and a separate theory element to be included in the driving test from 1996; and are considering the introduction of a scheme requiring newly qualified drivers to retake the driving test if they commit serious traffic offences.

Maritime and Waterway Research and Development

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will take action to press the EU Council Advisory Committee—CREST—to maintain the current balance of funding for research and development towards maritime transport and inland waterways; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take action to press the European Commission to resist the separation of maritime transport and inland waterway-related research and development.

Mr. Norris: Whereas annex I to the European Commission's specific proposal for transport research in the fourth framework programme for research and technological development 1994-98 distinguishes research on inland waterway transport from that on maritime transport, the allocation of funds suggested in annex II of the proposal combines the two. I am content with this approach. Of the six modal sub-themes in part B of the proposal, the Commission suggests that maritime and inland waterway research should be given the biggest allocation of funds. The United Kingdom Government's view is that the most severe problems, of congestion and safety, are in the road and air transport sectors, for which the suggested allocations should be increased. Given that the total funding for the transport research programme is fixed, these changes can be made only if compensating decreases are accepted in other sub-themes. I do not therefore propose to press CREST to maintain the Commission's suggested level of funding for maritime and inland waterway research.

London Underground (Power Failure)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much compensation has been paid out by London Underground to commuters for the delays incurred as a result of the power failure on the Central line in November 1993;

(2) what was the overall cost of remedying the cause of the power failure on the Central line of the London Underground in November 1993.

Mr. Norris: London Underground estimates that the total cost which it has incurred as a result of November's power failure has been around £1,723,000. This figure includes the effect of the failure on ticket sales, and the cost of providing emergency bus services, as well as the direct engineering costs of putting right the fault. It also incorporates approximately £193,000 of claims paid out under the terms of London Underground's customer charter.

Ministry of Defence Airfield, Northolt

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to develop business aviation at the Ministry of Defence airfield at Northolt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: My Department and the Ministry of Defence will go out to consultation soon with industry on the way in which the private sector could be involved in making better use of the existing capacity for civil operations at RAF Northolt.

A35

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his plans to build the Puddletown and Tolpuddle bypass on the A35.

Mr. Key: The Tolpuddle and Puddletown bypass is on a reserve list of schemes to be started this financial year if sufficient funds become available.

Trunk Road Assessment Report

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report and his response to that report; and if he will place copies of the report in the Library.

Mr. Key: I refer my hon. Friend to the responses that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) and the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 20 May 1994, Official Report, columns 596 and 599.

On publication, the report and the Government's response will be placed in the Library.

Fennell Report

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met (a) Her Majesty's railway inspectorate and (b) London Underground to discuss progress in implementing the outstanding recommendations of the Fennell report into the King's Cross fire.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with London Underground and Her Majesty's railways inspectorate to discuss a variety of issues. In addition, he receives annual progress reports from London Transport on the implementation of the Fennell report's recommendations.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 59, what assessment he has been given by London Underground and Her Majesty's railways inspectorate of when each recommendation of the Fennell report will be implemented.

Mr. Norris: The time scale for completing implementation of the 10 remaining recommendations of the Fennell report remains under discussion between HM railways inspectorate and London Underground. Dates for completion of implementation have still to be determined.

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 59, which recommendation of the Fennell report was not accepted by London Underground Ltd.; and by what other means it has been completed.

Mr. Norris: The recommendation in question was No. 117 which suggested that junior station staff be provided with paging equipment as an alternative to personal radios. London Transport felt this recommendation to be unnecessary as they had already accepted recommendation 116, which required the issue of radios to station staff, and were committed to providing all underground station staff with personal radios. This has now been done.

Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for the last financial year (a) the target and (b) the actual outturn for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's vehicle excise duty enforcement.

Mr. Key: The target set for successfully completed VED enforcement cases in 1993-94 was initially £445,000 —later increased to £455,000. The outturn for the year was 455,420 cases.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to public funds to date of the DVLA vehicle registration office review; and what is the total budget for the review.

Mr. Key: Some £106,000—VAT-inclusive—against a total budget of £115,000—VAT-inclusive.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons the Association of Chief Police Officers was asked to meet the consultants carrying out the DVLA and VRO review.

Mr. Key: As part of their work, the consultants were asked to recognise and balance the interests and requirements of various and separate VRO customer groups. Accordingly, the consultants met representatives of ACPO and a number of other organisations during the course of the review.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the revenue raised by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency owing to induced re-licensing.

Mr. Key: We estimate that in 1991-92, some 115,000 evaders or would-be evaders were encouraged to relicense their vehicles as a direct result of vehicle excise duty enforcement activity, realising some £8·4 million in revenue which would not otherwise have been collected. In 1993-94, following the introduction of the red windscreen warning notice scheme, some 345,000 motorists were encouraged to relicense with revenue recovery of around £28 million.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances vehicle excise offence reports may be discarded.

Mr. Key: The main reason for not proceeding with vehicle excise duty offence reports is that checks of the DVLA vehicle register reveal that the vehicles are in fact licensed and no offence has been committed. Other cases are not completed because of defects in offence reports, more than one report being received for the same offence, problems in tracking down offenders, difficulties in serving summonses and availability of resources.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by each "no further steps" code the number of vehicle excise offence reports that the DVLA closed in the last financial year.

Mr. Key: The information is as follows:

	Number
NFS 1-8 (see note)	492,000
NFS 9 (arrears of duty paid)	5,563
NFS 10 (case returned unheard by court)	7,927
NFS 11 (induced relicensing brought about by excise offence report or out of court settlement)	130,000
NFS 12 (induced relicensing brought about by windscreen warning notices)	2,897

Note:

CODE 1	Unable to trace offender.
CODE 2	No Offence, e.g., vehicle not on public road.
CODE 3	Summons not served.
CODE 4	Unable to interview/establish responsibility for vehicle.
CODE 5	Prosecution discontinued by Crown Prosecution/Police.
CODE 6	Specified difficulties, e.g., keeper deceased, bankruptcy.
CODE 7	Out of time.
CODE 8	Unactioned, e.g., information on Excise Offence Report insufficient/incorrect.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the success of the automatic first registration and licensing user acceptance run by the DVLA;

(2) what measures the DVLA intends to take to prevent fraud or misuse during the automated first registration and licensing trial in Bristol;

(3) if he will make a statement on the negotiations between the DVLA, motor car manufacturers and dealers over the introduction of automatic first registration and licensing;

(4) what security measures are in place for dealers or manufacturers taking part in the automated first registration and licensing trial run by the DVLA to protect the vehicle excise duty discs;

(5) what is the start date for the automatic first registration and licensing pilot; how many dealers and manufacturers are involved in the trial; what is the length of the trial; and what is the estimated number of transactions the dealers and manufacturers will handle during the trial period;

(6) which dealers have withdrawn from the automatic first registration and licensing pilot being run by the DVLA; and if he will make a statement;

(7) which registration year the dealers and manufacturers taking part in the automated first registration and licensing pilot scheme run by the DVLA will use;

(8) what was the original date of the automatic first registration and licensing user acceptance trial carried out by the DVLA; what is now the start date; and what are the reasons for the discrepancy;

(9) what sanctions are available to the DVLA against dealers refusing to sign up to the automatic first registration and licensing scheme when it goes live across the country.

Mr. Key: It was hoped that the first phase of the automated first registration and licensing scheme could have begun on 23 May. Unfortunately, user acceptance trials prior to that showed that more work needed doing on the computer programs, and the start date is now scheduled for 11 July, currently with the originally designated dealerships. Vehicles registered under the AFRL scheme will be allocated registration marks for the appropriate year.

Participation by dealers and manufacturers in automated first registration and licensing is voluntary, but I am confident that they will find the scheme offers a number of advantages. The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders and the Retail Motor Industry Federation with which we have negotiated and co-operated throughout the scheme are confident of a high take-up rate. Two manufacturers are expected to take part in the initial phase, which will cover three months, but others may join either in this or the one to take place in the autumn. I expect 2,000 vehicles to be registered by computer over the three months. Vehicle excise discs will be kept in a secure environment as required of all of our current licensing agents.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information on the owners of vehicles the DVLA gave to community charge collectors in Scotland in 1993-94; who was responsible for releasing this information; and what action is being taken.

Mr. Robert Key: Under the Vehicle Excise and Registration Bill the Secretary of State can release the names and addresses of vehicle keepers to local authorities to assist in the investigation of an offence or where "reasonable cause" can be shown. The pursuit of unpaid debts by community charge collectors is covered by both these provisions and the information is accordingly released to local authorities by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the vehicle registration offices which have disabled access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The vehicle registration offices on the list provide disabled access to their customer service areas:

Vehicle Registration Offices with Access to Disabled Customers

Aberdeen, Bangor, Birmingham, Bournemouth, Brighton, Bristol, Cardiff, Carlisle, Chelmsford, Chester, Croydon, Dundee, Edinburgh, Gloucester, Huddersfield, Hull, Ilford, Inverness, Ipswich, Leicester, Lincoln, Liverpool, Luton, Maidstone, Manchester, Middlesbrough, Newcastle, Northampton, Nottingham, Oxford, Portsmouth, Preston, Reading, Stanmore, Stoke, Swansea, Swindon, Taunton, Truro.

Where access is not available into Vehicle Registration Offices, alternative arrangements are normally made (eg a bell is available in another part of the building to call for a member of staff to attend the customer). All offices will fully assist disabled customers.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for the last financial year the number of excise offences reported to the Vehicle Registration Office network in the DVLA, the numbers processed and the money received by (a) out-of-court settlements and (b) successful prosecutions.

Mr. Key: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
Number of excise offences reported	1,891,000
Number of cases processed	1,631,000

	£ million
Revenue from out of court settlements	12·3
Revenue from prosecutions (fines, costs, unpaid duty (S.9 Vehicles Excise Act 1971))	33·5

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who will decide whether to impose sanctions on a dealer misusing the automatic first registration and licensing system.

Mr. Key: Depending on the circumstances, either DVLA or the manufacturer.

Jubilee Line

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many jobs will be created by the construction of the Jubilee line extension; what measures are being taken to ensure that the residents of Newham, Tower Hamlets, Southwark and Greenwich are employed in them; what estimate he has made as to the proportion of those jobs will be taken up by the residents in those boroughs; and how this is being monitored.

Mr. Norris: I understand from London Underground Ltd. that it is estimated that some 22,000 jobs will be created by the construction of the Jubilee line extension, about one third of which will be in the London area. LUL has asked its contractors to ensure that local people are made aware of the employment opportunities and that people trained under local construction training schemes are employed where possible. LUL is monitoring the position with its contractors.

Ex-officials (Road Construction Companies)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many officials at grade 7 or above who have left his Department in the past five years now occupy management positions in any of the companies holding contracts for the construction of roads or which are significant suppliers to them.

Mr. Norris: This information is not held within the Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ship's Officers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning his proposals to remove officer nationality requirements for senior officers on vessels registered in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: There have been 50 responses to the consultation document setting out these proposals.

Air Traffic

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the United Kingdom airlines' latest projection of the proportion of full-day peak and morning peak-time slots scheduled for a typical mid-August 1994 week at Heathrow and Gatwick as a proportion of total slots available for both periods.

Mr. Norris: This information is not held by the Department because slot allocation at those airports is carried out by an independent co-ordinator employed by the airport operator. I understand that of the total summer season slots allocated by the start of the season, approximately 54 per cent. at Heathrow and 70 per cent. at Gatwick had been allocated to United Kingdom airlines.

A41

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's latest estimate of average daily traffic flows and average peak hour traffic flows on the A41 at Aston Clinton.

Mr. Key: Average weekday traffic flows on A41 through Aston Clinton in early May were 24,000 vehicles per day—16-hour. Maximum peak hour flows during the week are between 1,000 to 1,200 vehicles per hour in each direction.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress made and the timetable for the remaining planning stages of the A41 Aston Clinton bypass.

Mr. Key: We are making arrangements for a public inquiry to be held this year but at the same time pursuing withdrawal of the remaining objections to the supplementary orders. If successful we may not need a public inquiry. Progress beyond a public inquiry is uncertain and will depend upon its outcome and the availability of resources at the time.

Highways Agency

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which private sector organisation has been approached formally or informally by officials of his Department or Agencies on the potential for privatisation, market testing or contracting out of the Highways Agency.

Mr. Key: None.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Norris: In the Department of Transport, practice when issuing consultation documents has varied in the past. In future, however, the Department will inform those consulted that their responses might be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential.

Departmental Running Costs

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he decided to cut the running costs of his Department by 20 per cent.; when the embargo on announcing the decision was lifted; and who took the decision to impose the embargo.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department's running costs have not been cut. I have set it a requirement to make a 20 per cent. improvement in efficiency with the target of achieving it in the two years from 1 April 1994 to 1 April 1996. The requirement was announced on 9 May. By convention, the announcement was not made in the period immediately preceding the local government elections on 5 May.

British Rail Staff (Assaults)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the number of assaults on British Rail staff (a) in 1993 and (b) to date in 1994.

Mr. Freeman: The table shows the total number of reported assaults on British Rail staff during 1993 and the first four months of 1994.

Offence	1993	[1]1994
Attempted murder	2	0
Grievous bodily harm	19	4
Wounding	20	7
Actual bodily harm	356	102
Common assault	168	61
Others	14	4
Total	579	178

[1] 1 January to 30 April.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Norris: The rules on outside appointments do not require Departments to maintain records of job offers made to their staff. I regret that I cannot therefore provide the information requested.

M40

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the strategic context in which the Highways Agency review of a road linking the M40 near Oxford and the A5 near Leighton Buzzard is being placed.

Mr. Key: When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced the outcome of the roads review it was made clear that the east-west route between the M40 and the M11 would be withdrawn. The strategic study of traffic needs in a corridor from the M40 to the A5 which was announced in January was confirmed. The Department is responsible for the strategic trunk road network and the study is in that context. The scope for the study has not yet been decided.

Delivery of the road programme is for the Highways Agency.

Disabled People

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the Government's policy on the European Commission's proposed directive on the introduction of measures aimed at promoting improvements in the travel conditions of workers with motor disabilities.

Mr. Freeman: The Government position is set out in the explanatory memoranda of 17 April and 3 June 1991, which relate to the original proposal—4315/91 COM(90) 588 FINAL—and of 16 October 1991 on the amended proposal—4113/92 COM(91) 539 FINAL. Copies of those documents have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many people have had their vehicle excise duty exemption on disabled persons' vehicles cancelled due to improper use for each year since 1989;

(2) what was the total number and percentage of claims for VED exemption which have been refused an exemption certificate for each year since 1989;

(3) what was the total number of VED discs issued to disabled persons in (i) the 1976 scheme, (ii) Motability component and (iii) passengers getting disability living allowance or pre-attendance allowance for each year since 1989;

(4) if he will give the number of people successfully prosecuted for the improper use of VED exemptions on disabled persons' vehicles for each year since 1989.

Mr. Robert Key: No record is maintained for the number of disabled people with an entitlement to exemption from VED which is cancelled because of improper use or the number of prosecutions carried out because of improper use of a vehicle exempted under the provision. In both instances, however, the number is likely to be very small. No statistics are available on the number of unsuccessful applications for certificates of exemption from VED.

The total number of vehicles licensed under the disabled exemption was 320,000 in 1989, 380,000 in 1990, 420,000 in 1991, 470,000 in 1992 and 560,000 in 1993. There is no breakdown of these by category.

Ex-officials (Road Construction Companies)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many officials at grade 7 or above who have left his Department in the past five years now hold directorships in any companies holding contracts for the construction of roads or which are significant suppliers to them.

Mr. Norris: This information is not held within the Department, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Staff

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Department will carry out full consultations with the unions over staff surpluses in line with section 34 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993.

Mr. Norris: If a potential redundancy situation occurs, full consultation with the trade unions will take place, in line with the provisions of section 34 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993.

DEFENCE

RAF Personnel (Hearing Problems)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what records he has of loss of hearing experienced by Royal Air Force personnel working in the vicinity of (a) four-engined Vulcan bombers and (b) other aircraft which are landing or taking off; and what steps were taken (i) in 1964 onwards and (ii) currently to prevent any such hearing loss.

Mr. Hanley: Although general medical statistics relating to noise-induced hearing loss among Royal Air Force personnel have been maintained since 1979, it is not possible to identify from these the source of the noise exposure responsible. Central records are not held of personnel who have experienced loss of hearing from working in the vicinity of Vulcan Bombers or other aircraft.

Where there is a risk of noise induced hearing loss, the RAF has for many years made provision to prevent such loss by reducing the noise at source or by providing a barrier between source and receiver, such as hearing protectors, and by limiting exposure. A formal hearing conservation programme was introduced in 1970, and current service regulations are based on the Noise at Work Regulations 1989.

Commonwealth War Graves Commission

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to meet members of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission to discuss cuts to funding.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence met representatives of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission on 21 February 1994 to discuss and agree our contribution to the Commission's budget for 1994-95. There are no plans for further meetings to discuss this year's funding.

Commission staff would normally advise member nations of their funding requirement for 1995-96 in October. This will then be discussed by the commission's finance committee, on which my Department is represented.

Minx Programme

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current stage of development of the Minx programme; and which companies are involved in it.

Mr. Aitken: No development of Minx is currently being undertaken.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the last five years the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ballistic Missile Defence

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tenders his Department received in response to the invitation issued in March for a pre-feasibility study contract on ballistic missile defence; and when he expects to announce the award of the contract.

Mr. Aitken: Responses to the invitation to tender are not due until the end of this month. We expect to be able to announce the award of contract this autumn.

NATO (Counter-proliferation)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what matters in regard to counter-proliferation strategies for the alliance were discussed at the NATO ministerial meeting held in Brussels on 24 and 25 May.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the communiqué published following the ministerial meeting of the NATO defence planning committee. An overall policy framework for NATO's approach to proliferation was also released following a meeting of the North Atlantic council on 9 May. Copies of both documents will be placed in the Library of the House.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. Hanley: My Department's internal guidance on the implementation of the code of practice has been freely available since 4 April, and may be obtained by either writing to my Department or telephoning the Ministry of Defence public inquiry office on 071-218-6645. I am also placing a copy in the Library of the House.

RAF Instructors

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total Royal Air Force complement for (a) qualified flying instructors, (b) weapons instructors and (c) other aircrew instructors (i) at operational conversion units, (ii) on operational squadrons and (iii) elsewhere.

Mr. Hanley: As at 27 May 1994 the total number of Royal Air Force aircrew instructor posts was as follows:

	Operational conversion units	Operational squadrons	Elsewhere	Total
Qualified flying instructors	87	49	371	507
Qualified weapons instructors	39	39	37	115
Other aircrew instructors	224	37	162	423

Defence Costs Study

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the name and rank of Treasury officials on each of the defence costs study working groups on which the Treasury was represented; and what are the numbers of visits paid and formal meetings held by those teams.

Mr. Aitken: The Treasury has been represented on each of the 33 defence costs study teams. Treasury personnel involved, their rank and studies—as listed at pages 78 and 79 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates, 1994—with which they were associated are as follows: Mr. P. Brook, grade 7—security; Ms V. Carpenter, SEO—estate and property; Mr. M. Davis, SEO—non-operational information systems; Mr. R. Devereux, grade 5—Procurement Executive—projects and practices; Procurement Executive —organisation and function; naval infrastructure; training; Mr. M. Donnelly, grade 5—market testing/contracting out; training; Navy management structure and manning; Army management structure and manning; RAF management, structure and manning; defence intelligence and minor studies; Mr. L. Palmer, grade 7—MOD police; research and development; Miss A. Perkins, grade 3—MOD head office; HQs, service command and TLB structure; repair, spares, storage and distribution; Ms H. Tierney, grade 7 —financial management; and Mr. P. White, grade 7—recruiting and manning; medical. There is no central record of all the visits paid and meetings held by the defence costs study teams and such information could be gathered only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the costings of options examined by the defence costs study prior to any recommendations being made.

Mr. Aitken: The proposals emerging from the work of the defence costs study, the broad outcome of which I hope to announce in July, will be subject to consultation in the normal manner. That consultation process will be supported by the publication of all relevant cost information.

Military Rescue Co-ordination

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future organisation of military rescue co-ordination.

Mr. Hanley: Detailed internal work continues on the implementation of our plans to locate the single military rescue co-ordination centre at Pitreavie. The defence costs study is, however, looking at all support functions and defence sites across the country, including this one.

Forth Area (Defence Facilities)

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the defence facilities in the Forth area.

Mr. Aitken: Defence facilities in all parts of the country have been examined in the defence costs study. We plan to make an announcement on the outcome in July. However, I envisage a continuing role for defence facilities in the Forth area.

Service Redundancies

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of redundancy packages for service personnel in each of the last three years.

Mr. Hanley: The current redundancy programme began in the financial year 1992-93. In that year, redundancy payments of £232 million were made, followed by payments of £509 million in the financial year 1993-94.

These payments include special capital payments, and early payment of terminal grants, commuted pension payments and the first year's payment of immediate pensions.

Arms Exports (Jordan)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the expenditure ceiling contained in the memorandum of understanding agreement signed with Jordan on 28 November 1979 was reached; and how these matters were reported to Parliament.

Mr. Aitken: It is not our normal practice to provide details of specific MOUs.

PRB (Belgium)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Royal Ordnance acted as a supplier, whether directly or through a Government defence export agency, to PRB of Belgium in the period from January 1981 to January 1985.

Mr. Aitken: It has been the established practice of successive Governments not to release information about individual defence exports.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what PRB of Belgium supplied to (a) International Military Services Ltd. and (b) its subsidiaries.

Mr. Aitken: This is a matter for the company.

Defence Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what date, and for which category of export, or for which destination, Royal Ordnance, Defence Export Services Organisation, and companies and agencies linked to the MOD, had Crown status, or were exempt from export licence controls.

Mr. Aitken: All exports made by the Crown have Crown status. These are exports from any Government Department including exports through or by the sales supply organisation of the Defence Export Services Organisation. Where Royal Ordnance exports were not conducted through the sales supply organisation, they required an export licence.

Exports with Crown status are subject to the same foreign and defence policy considerations as those requiring an export licence. It is not Government policy to provide specific details of defence exports.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of sales made by Royal Ordnance directly through the defence exports sales supply division of his Department between January 1981 and January 1985.

Mr. Aitken: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who is the legal custodian of the books and records of International Military Services Ltd., its subsidiaries and former subsidiaries; and whether the advice of the Treasury solicitors has been sought or offered on this point.

Mr. Aitken: International Military Services Ltd. is the legal custodian of its books and records, which it keeps in accordance with company law. I am not aware of any advice on this point from the Treasury solicitor.

Yugoslavia (New Zealand Troops)

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the training, command and control, logistic support and financial arrangements for the New Zealand company group to be deployed with British forces in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Hanley: The New Zealand Government authorised last month the deployment of a company group in support of UNPROFOR. We welcome this and have agreed that the company group should be attached to one of the British Army battalions serving in Bosnia-Herzegovina. We are still discussing with the New Zealand Government the details of the attachment and the level of assistance which will be provided to their contingent.

Exercise First Crusade

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 24 May, Official Report, column 108, how many squadrons of 1 Royal Tank Regiment participated in Exercise First Crusade.

Mr. Hanley: Three Sabre squadrons plus the HQ squadron of 1 Royal Tank Regiment took part in Exercise First Crusade.

Mr. Stephan Kock

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contact (a) Defence Exports Services Organisation and (b) the Malaysian project office had with Mr. Stephan Adolphus Kock concerning defence sales to Malaysia during the period 1985 to 1990.

Mr. Aitken: My Department has no record of any specific contact between the DESO or the MPO and Stephan Kock during the period.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Aitken: Arrangements to record centrally all offers of outside employment to MOD Crown servants were put in place only from February 1992. Since that date, no such offers have been reported.

Swan Hunter

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 30 March, Official Report, column 996, what has been the result of his inquiries in relation to a bid for Swan Hunter; and what assessment he has made of business links between Triacorp International and Mr. Barzan al Takriti.

Mr. Aitken: Information provided to my Department by CMN is being routinely assessed. These matters are commercially confidential to the company concerned, but one of the main considerations will be the ability of Swan Hunter and its prospective purchasers to satisfy our stated requirements in their bid responses in competitions for MOD work.

If my hon. Friend has any information which he believes would be of help to my Department in making its assessment, I should be grateful if he would pass it to me.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the last inspection made at National Security Agency, Molesworth under the terms of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty; when the last arrest was made at RAF Molesworth under the base byelaws; and how many breaches of security there have been at RAF Molesworth over the last 18 months.

Mr. Hanley: The last inspection at RAF Molesworth under the terms of the INF treaty was in December 1992. There have been no arrests under the byelaws at RAF Molesworth since 1990. The Ministry of Defence police have attended 12 security incidents at Molesworth in the last 18 months.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the National Security Agency of America in the management of the joint analysis centre at Molesworth; how much the expansion of the joint analysis centre at Molesworth has cost and who has paid for this; if the hazardous waste stored at National Security Agency, Molesworth is from American bases in the United Kingdom; and if there are polychlorine benzines stored at this facility.

Mr. Hanley: The joint analysis centre at RAF Molesworth is operated by the United States European Command. No expansion of the JAC has been undertaken.

The cost of all works associated with the construction of this facility has been borne by the United States Government. The Defense Reutilisation and Marketing Organization is responsible for the resale or disposal of all United States Government property in the United Kingdom which is surplus to requirements. It operates a central collection facility at RAF Molesworth for the temporary storage of hazardous material. All electrical equipment received by the DRMO is tested for polychlorinated biphenyls. If they are found in concentrations exceeding legal limits, the material is disposed of through approved United Kingdom contractors.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the byelaw relating to RAF Molesworth are not used against intruders; what instructions have been issued to Ministry of Defence Police on arresting under RAF Molesworth byelaws or other similar byelaws; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: How MOD police deal with intruders will depend on the nature of the incident. Normally, the MDP will first ask those concerned to leave MOD property. Anyone who refuses to do so will be escorted from the property using the minimum force necessary to effect their removal. Where appropriate, offenders may be arrested and reported for breach of byelaws. If other offences are committed, such as criminal damage, the MDP make arrests accordingly.

Ms Lindis Percy

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who authorised the arrest and detention of Ms Lindis Percy, of Bradford, when she entered RAF Chicksands in Bedfordshire on Thursday 19 May; who authorised her detention under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts; who summoned the Bedfordshire police to attend; who authorised the release of Ms Percy without charge; how long she was held in detention; how many British and American personnel concerned in her arrest and detention were armed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements, in addition to the agreement regarding the status of forces of parties to the North Atlantic treaty of 1951, have been made between Her Majesty's Government and the United States of America concerning Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Hanley: The site at Menwith Hill has been made available to the United States visiting forces and their civilian component in accordance with the agreement regarding the status of forces of parties to the North Atlantic treaty of 1951 and other arrangements appropriate to the relationship which exists between the United Kingdom and United States for the purposes of our common defence. It is not our practice to comment on the detail of such agreements.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of the National Security Agency of America in running Menwith Hill station in North Yorkshire; how many people working at Menwith Hill station are employed by the NSA, and who employs the chief of Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the Adjournment debate of 25 March 1994 concerning Menwith Hill station, North Yorkshire, Official Report, columns 609-16.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many GCHQ staff are employed at Menwith Hill station.

Mr. Hanley: There is a significant GCHQ presence at Menwith Hill station. It is not Government policy, however, to give more detailed information on the deployment of GCHQ staff.

RAF Chicksands

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when RAF Chicksands is due to close; what are the main activities undertaken at the base; and where those activities are to be transferred.

Mr. Hanley: The US air force will leave RAF Chicksands by the end of September 1995. RAF Chicksands is a US Department of Defence communications centre managed by the United States air force. It is not our policy to comment in further detail on operational matters.

Officers (Cooks)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving officers in each service are entitled to the provision of cooks at public expense.

Mr. Hanley: The current number of posts for serving officers, where there is an entitlement for the provision of a cook at public expense, is as follows:

	Number
Royal Navy/Royal Marines	56
Army	33
Royal Air Force	26

Royal Yacht

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assessment he has made of the reduction in the ship's complement on Her Majesty's royal yacht Britannia that could result from refitting with modern engines;

(2) what are the estimated annual cost savings if Her Majesty's royal yacht Britannia is re-engined.

Mr. Hanley: If Her Majesty's yacht Britannia were to be re-engined, it would be necessary also to replace or refurbish other obsolescent equipments and systems. This could possibly save up to £2 million per annum in running costs, including a reduction in the ship's complement of around 75 posts. The capital costs of such work is, however, likely to be substantial.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what part Her Majesty's royal yacht Britannia will be playing in the D-day commemorations; and what alternative vessels have been designated in the event of non-operational availability.

Mr. Hanley: Her Majesty's yacht Britannia played a central part in the maritime events in the Solent and channel on Sunday 5 June. This included carrying members of the royal family and visiting Heads of State in a review of ships at anchor off Spithead, leading a wreath-laying ceremony in mid-channel and crossing to Ouistreham. No alternative vessel was designated.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the authorised establishment of the Ministry of Defence police for each of the last five years; and what is its proposed establishment for each of the next five years.

Mr. Hanley: The establishment of the Ministry of Defence police for the last five years is:

	Police Officers	Civilians
1989	4,964	144·5
1990	4,990	156
1991	5,113	183
1992	5,307	197·5
1993	4,938	209

It is not our practice to speculate on our likely future manpower requirements.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change the role of the Ministry of Defence police.

Mr. Hanley: The future role of the Ministry of Defence police is under consideration as part of the study being conducted by Sir John Blelloch and his team. The final report is currently expected at the end of this month.

Nuclear Submarines (Used Cores)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of providing an interim capability to transport used nuclear submarine reactor cores.

Mr. Aitken: The estimated cost of providing an interim capability using the two commercial containers will be in the order of £5 million.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of replacing the used core transport packages.

Mr. Aitken: The cost of replacing the used core transport packages with the new purpose-built containers is not yet finalised. We would not wish to prejudice contract negotiations currently taking place with industry by providing an estimated figure.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of obtaining a licence for the replacement for the used core transport package; and from which subheads of which votes these funds are taken.

Mr. Aitken: Until contract negotiations are complete, we are not in a position to speculate as to the likley cost of licensing the new purpose-built containers. Provision for funding of this work is currently contained in vote 03, sub-heading F.

Nuclear Test Ban

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current policy on the retention of the right to conduct safety tests under the comprehensive nuclear test ban regime currently being negotiated in Geneva.

Mr. Aitken: The Government are committed to playing an active and constructive part in the negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear test ban. We will look for a verifiable and effective prohibition of all nuclear tests, with the aim of making a contribution to our international non-proliferation objectives. Previously, a minimal programme of nuclear testing has been an important part of proving the safety and reliability of our nuclear warheads. We now aim to use and develop alternative technologies.

Fissile Materials

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current policy on a fissile materials cut-off.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs—my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg)—on 7 February to the hon. Member for Blaenau, Gwent (Mr. Smith), Official Report, column 15.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give further consideration to publication of his Department's inventory of fissile materials that are not currently in use in nuclear weapons.

Mr. Aitken: It would not be in the national interest to make public details of fissile material held for our nuclear weapons programme.

Civilian Guard Force

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to change the role of his Department's civilian guard force.

Mr. Hanley: We have no plans to change the role of the Ministry of Defence guard service.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for a home guard force to supplement the Ministry of Defence police and the civilian guard force.

Mr. Hanley: In the context of the defence costs study we are looking at the idea of creating military home service engagements for carrying out guarding duties. However, this is only one of a number of proposals relating to security which have emerged. Much more work is needed before we can decide to proceed with this particular idea.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Hanley: When conducting consultation exercises, my Department considers carefully the need to publicise the background to Government decision making and the individual's right to privacy. Decisions on the need to publish are taken on a case by case basis, and responses are not published where an individual has asked that their remarks be treated as confidential. We have no plans to change this policy.

Hospitals

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent on capital improvements during the last (a) 20 and (b) 10 years at (i) royal naval hospital, Haslar and (ii) Royal Air Force Hospital, Wroughton.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Trident

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the outcome of the test firing of the United Kingdom Trident II D5 missile.

Mr. Aitken: Pursuant to my answer of 26 May 1994 at column 234, HMS Vanguard successfully launched an unarmed Trident II D5 ballistic missile on 26 May 1994. This was the first such test firing by a United Kingdom submarine, marking an important stage in the Trident programme. HMS Vanguard remains on schedule to deploy around the turn of the year.

WALES

Forestry

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list forestry land in Wales previously owned by the Forestry Commission, or Forestry Enterprise, which has been sold into private ownership since 1 January 1989, with the dates of each sale and the yearly total amount of forestry land sold in each year in terms of (a) land area and (b) financial value.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Lists giving details of all areas of forest land sold in Wales by calendar year from 1981 to December 1993 are held in the Library of the House. The total areas sold and the receipts from the sales in each year since 1 April 1988 are given in the following table.

Year ending 31 March	Forest land sold (Hectares)	Total receipts £ million
1989	1,226	1·5
1990	1,102	1·8
1991	934	2·0
1992	1,231	2·2
1993	1,014	1·2
1994	[1]1,222	[1]1·8

Strategic Development Programme

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each county and district council what allocation of funding has been made under the strategic development scheme and its predecessor schemes, including the urban programmes, rural initiative, projects of national and regional importance and special projects, for the last three years and for 1994-95.

Mr. Redwood [pursuant to his reply, 19 April 1994, c. 460-66]: I regret that the table provided with my reply to the hon. Member was incorrect. A revised table providing the corrected information is given as follows:

Local Authority Urban Programme (UP), Rural Initiative (RI) Project of National and Regional Importance/Special Projects (PRNI/SP) and Strategic Development Scheme (SDS) allocations between 1991 and 1995

[1] Includes additional in-year allocations.

[2] Includes £0·5 million available to any local authority within the West Wales task force area.

[3] Does not include £1·9 million set aside for projects supported in principle for Carmarthen DC and Ceredigion DC.

[4] Includes slippage on schemes carried forward from 1993-94 and £10,000 revenue allocation for each of the five successful Community revival strategies, but excludes the capital allocations which will not be confirmed until receipt of the business plans in June 1994 or the money set aside for the development of the industrial village concept.

Consultants

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each of the last five years the cost to public funds of consultancy work provided by (a) KPMG Peat Marwick, (b) Touche Ross, (c) Price Waterhouse, (d) Ernst and Young, (e) CSL, (f) Prime, (g) Basis, (h) Theodore Goddard, (i) Dibb Lupton Broomhead, (j) Capita and (k) Shreeveport to his Department; and if he will list any other firms which have provided consultancy work and the costs to public funds for each of the last five years.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Kilburn) on 15 April 1994, Official Report, columns 318-20, which provides details of individual consultancy firms employed by the Welsh Office since 1988-89.

The Department's total expenditure on management consultancies is as follows:

	£ thousands
1988-89	479
1989-90	342
1990-91	229
1991-92	1,109
1992-93	1,416
1993-94	1,454

Details of expenditure with individual firms cannot be disclosed for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. Redwood: The Welsh Office guidance on implementing the code of practice was issued internally on 19 April. I have sent a copy to the hon. Member and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and of the Welsh Office, Cardiff. A bilingual leaflet for the public is in preparation and will be distributed to advice centres and public libraries in Wales.

School Buildings

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount was spent on repair and maintenance of school buildings by each local education authority in Wales and in Wales as a whole for each financial year since 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The available information is given in the following table. Figures for 1993-94 are not yet available.

Gross current expenditure on repair and maintenance of local authority school buildings, fixed plant and grounds, at cash prices[1]

[1] Excludes all capital expenditure. Excludes grant-maintained schools. Includes salaries of building maintenance workers and groundsmen, cost of materials, recharges by external agencies, charges from direct service organisations, architects, engineers and surveyors and expenditure on energy conservation and on health and safety. From 1990-91 onwards, also includes contract charges—including those relating to compulsory competitive tendering arrangements. Excludes salaries of caretakers, cleaners, etcetera.

Arable Aid

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the yield figures set for land in (a) less-favoured areas and (b) non-less-favoured areas in the calculation of arable aid payments in Wales for the 1994-95 marketing year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The yield in the LFA is set at 3.32 tonnes per hectare—t/ha—and the yield in the non-LFA is set at 5·17 t/ha. These yields give an overall average yield for Wales of 4.65 t/ha, the historical average yield for 1986-89, excluding the lowest and highest annual yields, as required by the EC regulation. It would require an EC change of regulation to allow more up-to-date yields to be used.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much a farmer growing cereals will be paid in arable aid for each hectare of cereals grown in 1993-94 in (a) less-favoured areas in Wales and (b) non-less-favoured areas in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The payment under the arable area payments scheme for cereals grown in Wales in 1993-94 will be 116·20 ecu per hectare in the LFA and 180·95 ecu per hectare in the non-LFA. These will be converted to sterling at the green rate prevailing on 1 July 1994 but are likely to amount to some £107 in the LFA and £167 in the non-LFA.

Payments will be reduced if the base area is exceeded.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out by county a breakdown of the 1993 arable area payments scheme.

Mr. Redwood: The number of hectares claimed by county in Wales as at end March 1994 is as follows:

	Simplified Scheme	Main Scheme
County	Area Claimed (ha)	Cereals Area Claimed (ha)	Oilseeds Area Claimed (ha)	Protein Area Claimed (ha)	Set-aside Area Claimed (ha)	Total

The total number of claims received were Main Scheme 299.
Simplified scheme, 2,223—this information is not available on a county basis.

Education Policy (Representations)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Buckley and Mynydd Isa head teachers' consortium to discuss their representations on educational policy for the early years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting.

Nursery and Reception Classes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning his policies for nursery and reception classes in local education authority schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The provision of education for children aged under five in local education authority schools remains at the discretion of the local education authorities themselves.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) male and (b) female (i) teachers and (ii) ancillary staff are employed in each local education authority in Wales in nursery and reception classes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of qualified teachers in nursery and primary schools in each local education authority, as at January 1993, are shown in the table. Data on males and females are not separately available for nursery schools. The numbers of ancillary staff in nursery and primary schools and the numbers of teachers in nursery and reception classes are not collected centrally.

Number of qualified teachers[1]

	Nursery schools	Primary schools

Powys	—	127	415
South Glamorgan	24	287	1,537
West Glamorgan	5	327	1,420

[1] Includes all full-time and part-time qualified teachers.

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cash allocation for health authorities discretionary use in each year since 1988-89, including 1994-95; and what was the percentage change in each year.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The overall level of cash increases for hospital and community health services including the provision to health authorities is as follows:

	Overall cash increase over previous year £ million	Percentage revenue cash increase over previous year Per cent.	Revenue cash increase for health authorities' discretionary use £ million	Percentage revenue cash increases for health authorities Per cent.
1988-89	46·5	6·2	39·3	5·3
1989-90	[1]44·0	4·8	51·3	6·3
1990-91	72·8	8·2	57·6	6·5
1991-92	103·7	10·6	92·0	9·8

	Overall cash increase over previous year	Percentage revenue cash increase over previous year	Revenue cash increase for health authorities' discretionary use	Percentage revenue cash increases for health authorities
	£ million	Per cent.	£ million	Per cent.
1992-93	102·3	9·1	79·0	7·0
1993-94	46·5	3·7	29·0	2·2
1994-95	53·0	4·3	[1]34·9	2·8

[1] Net of estimated saving of £16·3 million from the reduction in the rate of employers' superannuation contributions from 7·5 per cent. to 4 per cent. This sum, although not additional to the overall level of resources available for hospital and community health service in 1989-90 was redistributed to health authorities as additional cash resources for their discretionary use.

[2] Includes £1 million transferred from the resources previously allocated to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

The difference between the overall level of the cash increases and that provided to health authorities for their discretionary use represents the amount of money that has been earmarked each year for development in specific services from which health authorities derive benefit and which is allocated to health authorities during the financial year.

St. Dogmael's Landslip

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the St. Dogmael's landslip; when he will visit the area to inspect the site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has received representations from a number of organisations and individuals. He has no plans to visit the area at present.

Rugby Union

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department has given, directly or indirectly, to the sport of rugby union in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Central Government funding for sport in Wales is channelled for the most part through the Sports Council for Wales. In 1993-94 the council provided financial assistance of £167,241, to the sport of rugby union football.

National Parks

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for (a) each district council, (b) each county council, (c) each of the proposed new unitary council areas and (d) for Wales as a whole (i) the total area, (ii) the area of national parks and (iii) the percentage of the area occupied by national parks.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: With regard to the new unitary authority areas, I will write to the hon. Gentleman when the boundaries of the new authorities have been agreed by Parliament and will place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

(i) The total area of (a) each district council, (b) each county council and (d) Wales as a whole are published in Table 1.06 of the "Environmental Digest for Wales", No. 8, 1993, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

(ii) and (iii)

(a) The approximate area of each district council covered by national parks and the percentage of the area covered by the national parks are readily available only in respect of the Brecon Beacons and Pembrokeshire Coast national parks. Details are given in the following table.

District	Area covered by national parks (thousand hectares)	Percentage of district area covered by national parks
Brecon Beacons:
Brecknock	89·4	50·0
Dinefwr	22·7	23·2
Cynon Valley	5·4	30·4
Merthyr Tydfil	2·5	22·5
Blaenau Gwent	1·9	15·0
Torfaen	0·1	0·8
Monmouth	13·1	15·7
Pembrokeshire Coast:
Preseli Pembrokeshire	41·5	36·0
South Pembrokeshire	16·9	38·7

(b) For each county council the approximate area covered by national parks and the percentage of the area covered by national parks are as follows:

County	Area covered by national parks (thousand hectares)	Percentage of county area covered by national parks
Dyfed	81·1	14·0
Gwent	15·1	11·0
Gwynedd	217·1	56·2
Mid Glamorgan	7·9	7·8
Powys	89·4	17·6

(d) For the whole of Wales, national parks cover 409·8 thousand hectares, which is 20 per cent. of the total area of Wales.

Rural Transport Innovation Grant Scheme

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the amount of each grant approved by his Department in respect of the rural transport innovation grant scheme, under section 108 of the Transport Act 1985 for each year since 1987.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Three grants of £7,000, £8,762 and £2,450 were approved in 1987; three of £12,250, £11,000 and £11,000 in 1988; and one of £11,880 in 1990. No grants were approved in 1989 and none has been since 1990.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Redwood: It is my Department's normal practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to state that responses may be made public, unless respondees explicitly ask for their replies to be kept confidential. Non-confidential responses, or a summary, may be made available in a report or may be placed in the Library of the House and the Welsh Office, Cardiff.

Hospice Care

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue guidelines on the payment arrangements for hospice care to health authorities and the social services departments of councils; what representations he has received in relation to the appropriate source of funding for hospice care; what provision he intends to make in relation to the means-testing of hospice care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Guidance will be included in a forthcoming Welsh health circular, notifying health authorities of their additional allocations for support of the voluntary hospice movement.

My Department has received representations on funding for hospice care from Marie Curie Cancer Care and the George Thomas Centre for Hospice Care.

Where palliative care during terminal illness is arranged by the NHS, whether it is at home or as a hospice resident, there are of course no charges except where specifically allowed by statute—for example, prescription charges. Where, however, some support is provided by a social services authority, the usual rules for means-testing apply.

Block Grant

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much in percentage and cash terms of the Welsh Office block grant was allocated to each of the 12 votes within class XV of the supply estimates between 1988-89 and 1994-95.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is set out in the following table.

NB=Non-Block. In 1994-95 the industry and training programmes became part of the block.

[1] The totals shown for the block are not the sum of the figures for block programmes shown against individual votes. They include non-voted items such as local authority credit approvals, and for years before 1990-91, local authority grants which, although paid through the votes, did not score in the planning total.

[2] The expenditure covered by these votes has changed over the years as follows: vote 12: 1988-1991, rate rebate grant; 1991-92, water privatisation; 1992-93, no vote; 1993 onwards, OHMCI; vote 13, 1988-89, transport supplementary grants; 1989-91, water privatisation; 1991-93, no vote; 1993 onwards, ERDF.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times since his appointment he has had an engagement in the area of Ogwr borough council; and how many times he has travelled through (a) the borough of Ogwr and (b) the Bridgend constituency going to and from official engagements.

Mr. Redwood: I have visited the area of Ogwr borough council six times since I became Welsh Secretary, as follows:

1993

1 June	Bridgend
14 October	Bridgend
3 November	Laleston, Bridgend

1994

15 February	Porthcawl
28 March	Bridgend
30 March	Ogmore

It is not possible to estimate the number of times I have passed through the area, as this information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

I frequently travel through Bridgend on the train on the way to Port Talbot, Swansea and the south-west.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Redwood: The following statistics are available:

Year	Number of job offers reported by staff
	Grade 3 and above	Below grade 3	Number of staff involved in procurement work
1990	1	3	—
1991	—	4	—
1992	—	4	1
1993	—	1	—
1994 (to end May)	—	1	—

All those job offers resulted in applications to join the company concerned.

Information covering the years 1986 to 1989 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Private Investigation Services

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 643-44, how much his Department has spent on private investigation services during the last two years; if he will list those companies which have been employed by his Department during this period; what safeguards his Department took to ensure that these agencies were members of the Association of British Investigators; and what guidelines are currently in operation within his Department as regards this matter.

Mr. Redwood: Seven private investigation agencies have been used by my Department in the last two years, at a total cost of £7,684·10. Although there is no prerequisite for the agencies appointed to be members of the Association of British Investigators, all but two of these agencies have been members of the association.

Private investigation services have been used in cases of damage to trunk road furniture and personal injury claims. The companies are not named for reasons of commercial confidentiality. There are no specific guidelines for their use, other than value for money considerations.

Rights of Way

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in developing a rights-of-way network in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The development of a public rights-of-way network in Wales falls to the Countryside Council for Wales working in partnership with local authorities, voluntary bodies and user groups.

The council has set itself the target of ensuring that a public rights-of-way network is opened and available for use by 1995 and all eight Welsh highway authorities have confirmed their commitment to it. This interim network should comprise at least national trails, routes of strategic importance to highway and planning authorities and paths of special value to local communities.

A Wales-wide survey of rights-of-way was started in 1992, and to date over 100 surveys have been completed. The results have been analysed to provide detailed information on the location and condition of the Principality's network.

By 1999, the system of rights-of-way should be open and available for use. These targets are endorsed by the Government.

Prescriptions

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many prescriptions were dispensed in Wales in 1993-94; and how many individuals received exemptions from prescription charges.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: [holding answer 17 May]: Some 34,330,000 prescription items were dispensed in Wales in 1993-94. It is not known centrally how many individuals received exemption from prescription charges. However, in 1993-94 28,840,000 prescripton items exempt from charges were dispensed—excluding those where a pre-payment certificate was involved.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Desertification Convention

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to announce a change in funds to combat desertification at the signing of the desertification convention in Paris in June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 14 April at column 257.

We have no plans to make an announcement in Paris, but we will consider our position in the light of the agreement reached.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British nationality have been outstanding for (a) more than one year, (b) more than two years and (c) more than three years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On 31 May 1994, there were 11,388 applications for British citizenship in the nationality division which had been outstanding for more than one year, of which 2,915 had been outstanding for more than two years, including 818 for more than three years.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken to process applications for British nationality; and what were the average times taken in 1979, 1984 and 1989.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Average waiting times for certificates of British citizenship issued in May 1994 were 15 months for naturalisations and 11 months for registrations; and in May 1989, 22 and 18 months respectively. Comparable figures for 1984 and 1979 are not available, but average waiting times for the first quarter of 1985—calculated on a different basis—were 13 and 11 months, and for 1979, 25 months for naturalisations.

Migration Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigrants have entered the United Kingdom in the last 10 years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the ages and nationalities contained within this figure;

(2) how many people have emigrated from the United Kingdom in the last 10 years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the ages and nationalities contained with this figure.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on immigration and emigration from the United Kingdom is provided by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from the international passenger survey, which defines a migrant as a person leaving one country where he or she has been a resident for a year or longer with the intention of residing in another country for a year or longer. In the 10 years 1983-92, the total numbers of intending immigrants and emigrants were 2·31 million and 2·09 million respectively. These figures include British citizens and other EC nationals, but exclude migration between the Republic of Ireland and the United Kingdom. Analyses of the annual data by broad nationality and by broad age group are given in tables 2.1 and 2.9 respectively of the OPCS publication "International Migration, 1992", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Data for 1993 are not yet available.

As the IPS data are based on intentions to migrate, it is highly likely that they exclude persons seeking asylum after entering the country and other persons admitted as short-term visitors who are subsequently granted an extension of stay for a year or longer. It is estimated that there were around 200,000 such persons in 1983-92, net of persons leaving the United Kingdom for a short-term period who stayed overseas for longer than originally intended.

The OPCS data include temporary migration for a year or longer by, for example, students and workers. Home Office data on immigration relate to the number of persons accepted for settlement—that is, allowed to stay indefinitely. There were 514,000 such persons in the 10-year period 1984-93. Analyses by nationality of the annual data for 1984-92 and 1993 are given in table 6.5 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom, 1992", Cm 2368, and table 1.1 of the statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics—Third and Fourth Quarters and Year 1993", issue 9/94, respectively. An analysis by age of person is readily available only for 1992 and is given in table 6.2 of Cm 2368. Copies of both Home Office publications are also in the Library.

DTELS

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to pay the residual expenses arising from the privatisation of DTELS.

Mr. Howard: DTELS—formerly the Directorate of Telecommunications—was sold on 1 March 1994 to National Transcommunications Ltd. for £6·6 million. The balance of proceeds, after payment of expenses relating to 1993-94, was surrendered to the Consolidated Fund in March 1994.

There are further expenses arising from the sale to be paid in 1994-95. Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in a summer supplementary estimate for the Home Office's administration, immigration, probation and police support services vote, class VIII, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £800,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Cash Limits

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for changes to the 1994-95 cash limits within his responsibilities and to the Home Office running costs limit.

Mr. Howard: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VIII, vote 3—Home Office administration, immigration, probation and police support services, England and Wales —will be increased by £442,000 from £1,212,240,000 to £1,212,682,000. This will enable repayment of an advance from the contingencies fund of £800,000 for residual payments, which are not included in the public expenditure control total, in connection with the privatisation of the Directorate of Telecommunications: the amount required is reduced because of transfers totalling £358,000 out of the vote to other Government Departments. In consequence of these transfers, the Home Office gross running cost limit will be reduced by £358,000 from £1,706,534,000 to £1,706,176,000.

The local authority capital non-voted HO/LACAP cash limit will be increased by £421,000 from £121,870,000 to £122,291,000. The additional provision results from the transfer of supplementary credit approvals from the Welsh Office's non-voted cash limit WO/LACAP for the purpose of the replacement of fire service mobilisation and communications systems, to allow the Home Office to hold and issue the entire provision of fire supplementary credit approvals for both England and Wales. The increase will be offset by a transfer and will not therefore add to the planned total of expenditure.

Fire Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the fire service is required to attend train and plane crashes not involving fires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under section 1 of the Fire Services Act 1947, a fire authority has a duty to make provision for firefighting purposes, and in particular to secure the services of a fire brigade and equipment in order to meet efficiently all normal requirements. Section 3(1)(e) of the 1947 Act gives a fire authority supplementary powers to employ its brigade for purposes other than firefighting. This may include attendance at train and aircraft accidents not involving fires.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of fatalities resulting from fires in buildings built since 1979 for each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This information is not available from the statistics collected from fire brigades.

Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to take steps, ahead of Royal Assent, to implement any provisions of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill.

Mr. Howard: I intend that the new police authorities should be set up this autumn to prepare for the assumption of their full responsibilities from 1 April 1995. Under the terms of the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill currently before Parliament, the new authorities will include independent members who are neither councillors nor magistrates. I intend to undertake an advertising exercise at a cost not exceeding £40,000, so that members of the public can apply for appointment as an independent member of their police authority. No appointments will be made until the Police and Magistrates' Courts Bill has become law. The appointments will be made by the councillor and magistrate members of the new police authorities.

Parliamentary approval for expenditure on this new service will be sought in a summer supplementary estimate for the Home Office administration, immigration, probation and police support services, England and Wales vote, class VIII, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £40,000 will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund.

TREASURY

Taxation

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department is to make as to the effect of the recent tax increases on economic recovery within the Greater London area.

Mr. Nelson: The forecast for economic growth this year, including Greater London, takes full account of the effect of the tax increases announced in last year's Budgets. A number of recent indicators, including manufacturing output, retail sales, and new car registrations, suggest that the economy is continuing to recover.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury only holds records on the information requested from 1987. The answer to each question is as follows:

(a) Six: one in 1990, three in 1991, one in 1992 and one in 1993. All were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

(b) No records are held centrally because they are notified to line managers.

(c) Six in 1993, and one in 1994. None of these has been followed by applications to join any of the companies concerned.

(d) No central records are held for staff below grade 3 because they are notified to line managers. Details for staff at grade 3 and above are listed at (a).

Gilts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of British gilts were bought by foreign purchasers in each of the last three years and for 1994 to date.

Mr. Nelson: A sectoral breakdown of purchases of Government securities is given at table 10.2F of the Central Statistical Office's "Financial Statistics".

ECOFIN

Mr. Simon Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the most recent Council meeting of the European Economic and Finance Ministers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the United Kingdom at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Union—ECOFIN—in Luxembourg on 6 June.

The Council discussed follow-up work to the Brussels European Council conclusions on the Commission's White Paper on "Growth, Competitiveness and Employment." The Council endorsed a report from the Economic Policy Committee on labour markets which stressed the need for structural reforms and greater flexibility. The Council welcomed the indication from the President of the European Commission that he was ready to pursue the suggestion made by the German Minister for the establishment of an independent task force to consider deregulation. The Council considered reports from the European Commission and the European investment bank of trans-European networks.

Most Ministers agreed that there was insufficient evidence to show that a "financing gap" existed regarding TENs. The presidency will present a report to the Corfu European Council summarising the views expressed at ECOFIN.

The Council approved a recommendation on broad economic guidelines for consideration by the Corfu European Council in accordance with article 103(2) of the treaty.

The Council adopted the decision allowing the Community to participate in the European investment fund. I am placing in the Libraries of both Houses a copy of that decision and the associated EIF statute.

The Council took note of the work of a high-level group on possible taxes on carbon and energy, which would report to the Environment Council on 8-9 June, and concluded that final responsibility for taxation matters rests with the ECOFIN Council.

Finally, the Council also had a brief general discussion on fraud. However, a substantive discussion was deferred until July when detailed conclusions are expected to be adopted.

There were no formal votes.

Cash Limits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are proposed to the Inland Revenue's cash and running costs limits for 1994-95.

Mr. Dorrell: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate, the cash limit for class XVII vote 5 will be reduced by £51,462,000 from £1,704,123,000 to £1,652,661,000 and the running costs limits will be increased by £25,738,000 to £1,714,655,000. The cash limit reduction allows for £362,000 to be transferred to the Lord Chancellor's Department—class IX, vote 1—in respect of the transfer of responsibility to that Department for the costs of the general commissioners of income tax. The balance of the cash limit reduction and the increase in the running costs limit arise from the outsourcing of some of the Department's information technology work to EDS Scicon Ltd. on 1 July 1994. This involves switching capital expenditure into running costs.

LORD CHANCELLORS'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Services Ombudsman

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary. Lord Chancellor's Department when the legal services ombudsman intends to publish his third annual report.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The legal services ombudsman has today published his third annual report.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to implement the recommendations in the Law Commission's report, "Domestic Violence and Occupation of the Family Home."

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government have decided to implement almost all the recommendations contained in the report and consider them to provide a firm basis upon which to reform the law relating to the civil remedies for domestic violence and occupation of the family home. Legislation to implement the recommendations will be introduced when a suitable opportunity occurs.

The Government have not accepted the recommendation to give the police the power to take civil action on behalf of victims of domestic violence or the recommendation for two of the proposed new categories of associated persons who would be able to apply for non-molestation and occupation orders.

The categories which have not been accepted are people

> "who have at any time agreed to marry each other (whether or not that agreement has been terminated)" and people

> "who have or have had a sexual relationship with each other (whether or not including sexual intercourse)".

TRANSPORT

Cash Limits

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits and running costs limits for 1994-95.

Mr. MacGregor: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate and supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made:

(i) the cash limit for class VI, vote 1—Highways Agency—will be reduced by £3,500,000 from £2,102,028,000 to £2,098,528,000 to give effect to the transfer of expenditure on the Woolwich ferry to class VI, vote 5;

(ii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 5—local roads and transport—will be increased by £2,855,000 from £530,049,000 to £532,904,000. The increase is made up of a transfer from class VI, vote 1 of £3,500,000 offset by a transfer to DoT/LACAP of £645,000 which will therefore increase DoT/LACAP cash limit by £645,000 from £290,713,000;

(iii) the cash limit for class VI, vote 2—administration and transport services—will be increased by £1,015,000 from £234,410,000 to £235,425,000. Additional provision is required for residual expenses in connection with the sale of DVOIT at £15,000 and for the sale of the Transport Research Laboratory at £1,000,000.

The overall increase will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Accidents (Agricultural Machinery)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list (a) the number of accidents involving a tractor or other agricultural machinery on public roads and (b) the number of fatalities resulting from such accidents for each of the past eight years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: It is not possible to identify tractors and agricultural machinery in the road injury accident data collection system. However, by linking road accident data with vehicle licencing information, it is possible to provide broad estimates of the information required since 1989, which are shown in the table.

Injury road accidents involving agricultural machines[1] Great Britain 1989-92

Road Maintenance

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total public expenditure on road maintenance in England for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The figures are:

£ million

	Department of Transport expenditure			Local authority expenditure
Year	Trunk roads—capital	Trunk road bridges—capital	Trunk roads—current (routine)	Principal roads—capital	Bridges—capital	Local roads—current	Total
1989-90	240	66	104	—	—	1,410	1,820
1990-91	289	87	121	—	—	1,665	2,162
1991-92	307	120	145	—	80	1,690	2,342
1992-93	365	116	160	117	108	1,788	2,654
1993-94	403	129	162	176	146	1,744	2,760

Notes:

1. Local authority expenditure for capital work on principal roads and bridges is funded via transport supplementary grant.
2. Local authority current expenditure is funded through revenue support grant paid by DOE based on the highways maintenance standard spending assessment.
3. Figures for local authority expenditure in 1993-94 are budget figures.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Cash Limits

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what changes will be made to the cash limits or running costs limits for 1994-95 for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate, the cash limit for class XI, vote 7—Department of National Heritage administration—will be reduced by £3,080,000 from £24,680,000 to £21,600,000. This results from the transfer of responsibility for the international passenger survey to the Central Statistical Office from the 1 April 1994.

In addition, the Department of National Heritage gross running costs limit will be reduced by £3,080,000 from £31,008,000 to £27,928,000.

DEFENCE

Army Manpower

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the percentage reduction in British Army uniformed manpower strength since 1990.

Mr. Aitken: Between 1 April 1990 and 1 May 1994, the uniformed strength—trained and untrained personnel—of the Regular Army has reduced by approximately 20 per cent.

Navy Manpower

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the percentage reduction in Royal Navy uniformed manpower strength since 1990.

Mr. Aitken: Between 1 April 1990 and 1 May 1994, the total uniformed strength—trained and untrained personnel—of the Royal Navy, including Royal Marines, has reduced by approximately 12 per cent.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Cash Limits

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to change the 1994-95 (a) cash limit and (b) running costs limits for the Office of Public Service and Science.

Mr. Waldegrave: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate the cash limit for the Office of Public Service and Science, class XVIII, vote 1, will be decreased by £16,366,000 from £75,794,000 to £59,428,000 and the gross running cost limits will also be decreased by £15,745,000 from £95,751,000 to £80,006,000. The functions of the Offices of the Prime Minister, Government Chief Whip and Parliamentary Counsel have been transferred to the Cabinet Office, class XIX, vote 1. The net running cost limits for the Civil Service college has been decreased by £1,244,000 from £1,800,000 to £556,000.

The changes will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Science Budget

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what changes he proposes to the estimates class XVIII, vote 2—science.

Mr. Waldegrave: The cash limit for this vote is being reduced by £13,030,272 to £1,225,526,728. The reduction is the net effect of the following. A reduction to £13,685,272 in respect of that expenditure of the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, which is being met from the receipts from the sale of the Plant Breeding Institute. An increase of £655,000 in respect of class 3 super-computing time, responsibilty for which is to transfer from the higher education funding councils for England, Wales and Scotland. The increase will be offset by transfers from class X, vote 2—education: higher and further education—of £542,000; class XIV, vote 17—Scotland and Forestry Commission: education, arts and libraries—of £79,000; and class XV, vote 4—Wales: training and education—of £34,000. The additional provision has been allocated to subhead A3—the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 14 June at column 371-72.

PRIME MINISTER

Referendums

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost to public funds of the referendums on (a) membership of the European Community and (b) Scottish devolution.

The Prime Minister: The cost to public funds of the 1975 referendum on membership of the European Community was £6,100,000. The 1979 referendum on devolution for Scotland cost £820,500.

Finance

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements are being made to finance No. 10 Downing street, the Whips Offices, the Office of Parliamentary Counsel and the ceremonial branch.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for No. 10, the Whips Offices, the Office of Parliamentary Counsel and the ceremonial branch has been transferred, within the Cabinet Office, from the Office of Public Service and Science vote to the other services vote, with effect from 1 April 1994.

Parliamentary approval of this transfer of expenditure will be sought in a summer supplementary estimate for the Cabinet Office other services vote, class XIX, vote 1. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £7,365,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Cash Limits

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has to change the 1994-95 cash limit or running costs limit for the Cabinet Office other services vote.

The Prime Minister: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for Cabinet Office other services, class XIX, vote 1, will be increased by £16,366,000 from £27,015,000 to £43,381,000. At the same time the running costs limit will be increased by £15,467,000 from £26,295,000 to £41,762,000.

The increase reflects the transfer of certain administrative functions and provision from the Cabinet Office Office of Public Service and Science vote, class XVIII, vote 1, and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

ENVIRONMENT

Research Budget

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current projects included in his Department's research budget; and what proportion of his Department's research budget is spent on research to improve standard spending assessments.

Mr. Gummer: My Department is currently funding over 800 research projects. As the list of these projects runs to several pages, I will write to the hon. Member with a copy of the list.

It is not possible to provide an accurate estimate of the proportion of my Department's current research budget which will be spent on research to improve standard spending assessments until the research is commissioned, but it is not expected to exceed 0·05 per cent. in 1994-95.

Noise Legislation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review current noise disturbance legislation.

Mr. Atkins: In 1990 an independent noise review was established by my Department to consider all forms of control over noise pollution. It made several useful recommendations relating to improvement of the legislation which were considered carefully. As a result provisions were introduced into the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to strengthen the existing statutory nuisance duties and powers to control noise from domestic, industrial and commercial premises. These powers have been further extended by the Noise and Statutory Nuisance Act 1993 to control noise from vehicles, machinery and equipment in the street. We continue to monitor the effectiveness of existing environmental noise legislation and are keen to ensure that it is used to its full effect.

My Department continues to discuss all aspects of noise pollution and disturbance, including the scope for further improving the operation of the relevant legislation, with other Departments and a wide range of professional and voluntary organisations concerned with these issues.

Water Meters

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the estimated average annual water bill per household (a) before water metering and (b) after water metering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The average household unmeasured water supply bill in England and Wales in 1994-95 is £94 and for a metered water supply it is £97. The average household charge for combined water and sewerage services is £199 for both measured and unmeasured services.

Charges should not discriminate against metered customers. I am pleased that this year average measured household bills have fallen—by 1 per cent. for water and 3·8 per cent. for sewerage—ensuring a fairer balance in tariffs between measured and unmeasured customers.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase the planned level of total standard spending for 1995-96 to meet the transitional costs arising from local government reform in England.

Mr. Curry: For 1994-95 local authorities subject to reorganisation will be able to borrow to meet transitional costs. I expect that similar arrangements will apply for 1995-96 and subsequent years, and we shall take account of those arrangements in the local government finance settlement each year. The amount in 1995-96 will depend on decisions about areas to be reorganised which have yet to be made.

Rivers and Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the report on the cost benefit analysis for flow restoration to the River Darent approved by his Department in December 1993.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. Copies will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to the Director General of Water Services in respect of the cost implications to water services plcs of action to be taken on those sites of special scientific interest and rivers identified as being adversely affected by water abstraction.

Mr. Atkins: The Director General of Water Services has been advised of the proposals by Thames Water Utilities Ltd. to spend £6 million on the river Darent low flow alleviation scheme, and of proposals by Suffolk—now Essex—Water to spend £0·65 million in helping to restore water levels in Redgrave and Lopham fen.

Discussions are continuing on the cost implications of additional schemes for completion over the next few years.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what notification he has received from (a) the National Rivers Authority and (b) the statutory nature conservation agencies, regarding the investment necessary to remedy the adverse impacts of abstraction boreholes affecting rivers and sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority identified costs for remedial action for the River Darent of £7 million with an additional £5 million should subsequent testing under drought conditions indicate the need for further augmentation, and for Redgrave and Lopham fen, £2·8 million, approximately half of which is to be funded from the EC LIFE programme.

The National Rivers Authority reported on 40 rivers requiring remedial action in its report "Low Flows and Water Resources", published in March 1993.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those rivers and sites of special scientific interest that have suffered adverse impacts of water abstraction boreholes.

Mr. Atkins: The National Rivers Authority listed 40 sites requiring remedial action in its report "Low Flows and Water Resources", published in March 1993.

Biological Diversity

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made towards ratifying the United Nations convention on biological diversity.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom ratified the convention on biological diversity on 3 June 1994. Before ratifying we had already demonstrated our commitment to the aims of the convention, domestically and internationally, through the production of our biodiversity action plan and through the financial and other assistance we have made available to help developing countries preserve their biodiversity. We look forward to playing a constructive and positive role in the convention and its meetings.

Waste Imports and Exports

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide policy guidance on waste imports and exports.

Mr. Atkins: Last month a new control regime on waste shipments was introduced. The EC Waste Shipments Regulation and the United Kingdom's associated Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994 came into effect on 6 May. This legislation enabled the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligations under the Basle convention, to which the United Kingdom became a party on 8 May.

These obligations are based on the principle of national self-sufficiency in waste disposal. This principle is the means by which countries can be encouraged to take responsibility for disposing of the waste they generate. Thereby they are encouraged to minimise wastes—especially hazardous wastes—and to reuse and recycle, and to pursue policies of sustainable development.

We must also have regard for other environmental responsibilities arising from our membership of the European Union and the global community. In implementing the Basle convention, we should not lose sight of these wider considerations.

As a developed country, with ample disposal facilities to meet our waste arisings, we ourselves will have no need to export wastes for final disposal in other countries. The EC regulation prohibits such exports to countries outside the EC and EFTA the European Free Trade Association. We shall go further by proposing a complete prohibition on such exports to all countries.

There is no equivalent case for a general ban on exports of wastes for recovery. But special considerations apply to the export of hazardous wastes for recovery in developing countries and countries in transition. At the second conference of the Basle convention in March, it was recognised that there is a high risk that such exports will not be managed in environmentally sound ways in the country of receipt. It was decided that, except in exceptional circumstances, trans-boundary movement of hazardous wastes from Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development to non-OECD states for the purposes of recovery should be prohibited. In the Government's opinion, this decision has now taken effect.

Our policy towards imports is based on similar principles. In future, the presumption will be that wastes should not be imported for final disposal in this country. This applies both to landfill, either directly or indirectly, and to incineration, and also to disposal under the guise of recovery—so-called "sham recovery". However, imports for genuine recovery operations, including energy recovery, will continue to be allowed.

For most wastes, all other countries should now develop adequate final disposal facilities and there seems to be no reason to delay a prohibition of imports. There may, however, be special circumstances where imports of certain wastes for specialist disposal processes—and in particular for high temperature incineration—might be justified on wider environmental grounds for very limited periods and quantities. This would apply on a transitional and reducing basis where a country had not yet completed specialist disposal capacity or was dealing with a backlog inherited from a former communist regime in eastern Europe. We propose to develop strict criteria which would regulate any such continued imports. Our criteria would take account of the technical and environmental characteristics of the waste stream, and the circumstances of the exporting country. Except for small quantities particularly from developing countries, we would propose that the transitional period should not exceed three years at most.

We do not contemplate importing from countries in a position to develop their own disposal facilities, but taking no action to do so. That would be quite contrary to our policy towards self-sufficiency. Nor would we allow imports which could not be safely handled and managed within the existing disposal capacity in the United Kingdom.

We shall be making more detailed proposals on exports and imports in the form of a draft waste management plan. Associated with the plan will be technical guidance designed to assist competent authorities in making decisions. There will be a full opportunity for consultation on the draft plan and technical guidance before it is issued.

Cash Limits

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to make any changes to the cash limits in 1994-95.

Mr. Gummer: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate, the cash limit for class VII, vote 8—revenue support grant, payments of non-domestic rates, Valuation Office services, etc., England—will be reduced by £2,900,000 from £29,635,066,000 to £29,632,166,000. This comprises a reduction of £4,400,000 in provision for Valuation Office rating services and an offsetting increase of £1,500,000 for Valuation Office banding and valuation services. Some £1,550,000 of the savings will be used to support increased expenditure on class VII, vote 12—council tax transitional reduction grant, community charge grants, emergency financial assistance to local authorities, non-domestic rates outturn payments, etc., England. The remaining savings of £1,350,000 will be surrendered to the Consolidated Fund.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate, the cash limit for class VII, vote II—PSA Services—will be reduced by £25,000,000 from £123,693,000 to £98,693,000, and the net running cost limit on this vote will reduce by £25,000,000 from £123,293,000 to £98,293,000. The reduction reflects savings achieved in the residuary functions, and reductions in severance figures and secondee numbers arising out of most recent forecasts following the sales of the former PSA building management businesses.

In addition, and subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class VII, vote 13—sale of PSA businesses—will be increased by £9,449,000 from £401,000 to £9,850,000. The increase will not constitute a claim on the reserve as it will be netted off the proceeds from the Government's privatisation programme. The provision is sought, as provided for in the sales agreements, to fund adjustments to cash assets following reviews of the completion statement of the PSA building management businesses post-sale, and to contribute to the costs incurred by the purchasers of both PSA projects and the building management businesses in making transferred staff redundant.

Increases on votes 8 and 12 will be offset by reductions in other cash-limited expenditure and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Energy Efficiency

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in preparing updated guidance for local authorities on energy efficiency in council housing in follow up to interim guidance published last year.

Sir George Young: I am pleased to inform the House that updated and consolidated guidance was published on 13 June. A copy of the guidance, entitled "Energy Efficiency in Council Housing", has been placed in the Library.

Improving energy efficiency in council housing brings benefits to tenants, landlords and the environment. Tenants benefit from warmer, healthier homes which are cheaper to heat. Landlords gain from lower maintenance and management costs. The environment benefits from reductions on carbon dioxide emissions.

Since last year, all local housing authorities have been expected to take account of energy efficiency in their housing strategies and investment programme submissions. Performance here is one of the factors taken into consideration in determining housing investment programme allocations.

The guidance, which draws on lessons from my Department's successful green house demonstration programme and the Energy Efficiency Office's best practice programme, provides practical assistance on how to go about developing an effective energy efficiency policy. Accompanying the main guidance is a series of guides providing further advice on key themes such as funding sources for energy efficiency work, tenant consultation and the benefits that can flow from integrated packages of measures.

Some authorities have been making great strides on energy efficiency. I welcome that. But much remains to be done not only to combat environmental problems but to maximise the scope for cost-effective energy efficiency action and getting added value from planned investment.

I look to authorities to translate this important guidance into action.

M25 (Service Area)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the development of a motorway service area on green-belt land owned by Cape plc of Uxbridge and adjoining the M25 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer Friday 20 May 1994]: The proposal referred to is that between junctions 15 and 16 of the M25 at Woodlands Park, near Iver. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has directed refusal of this application. There is also an article 14 direction in place restricting the grant of permission in respect of this development. I have received the representations of my hon. Friend on behalf of his constituents and as far as policy is concerned, I refer him to my answer of 18 May at column 507.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Oslo and Paris Commissions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations her Department has received from Parcom member states regarding the forthcoming 16th joint meeting of the Oslo and Paris Commissions.

Mr. Jack: None.

Overgrazing

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received on the application of environmental conditions to livestock headage payment schemes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We received 40 responses to the consultation paper on the application of environmental conditions to livestock headage payment schemes which we issued on 29 March 1994, from a range of bodies including the main farming and environmental interests. The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food announced, on 10 June, that measures to prevent over-grazing similar to those already operating in the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme would be introduced into the other livestock premium schemes when they are renewed. We have written to all those who responded to the paper to inform them of this decision.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation she has made of the National Farmers Union proposals for preventing over-grazing; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The NFU received a detailed response to its proposals for preventing over-grazing from the Minister of Agriculture earlier this year.

On 10 June the Minister of Agriculture announced that measures to prevent over-grazing similar to those already operating in the hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme would be introduced into the other livestock premium schemes when they are renewed.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what circumstances it is her Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if she will arrange for her Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Jack: It is commonplace for the Department, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses may be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential. This practice is being codified in departmental guidance to ensure that it is followed in all cases.

Nuclear Issues

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how the recently announced Department of Environment review of radioactive waste management policy will affect the position that the United Kingdom will take at the forthcoming 16th joint meeting of the Oslo and Paris Commissions;

(2) what position the United Kingdom will be taking at the forthcoming 16th joint meeting of the Oslo and Paris Commissions on proposals concerning nuclear issues; and if she will set out her reasons in each case.

Mr. Jack: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. friend the Minister of State for the Environment and Countryside on 14 June, at column 337.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many job offers were reported by staff in her Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Jack: The table shows the number of job offers reported by staff in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in each of the last 10 years. All but one of these reports resulted in an application to join the company concerned.

Number of job offers reported by MAFF staff 1984 to date

	Grade 3 and above	Below grade 3	Concerned with procurement/ contract work	Concerned with other work
1993	—	10	1	9
1992	—	8	1	7
1991	1	10	—	11
1990	2	12	—	14
1989	2	3	—	5
1988	3(1)[1]	6	—	9(1)[1]
1987	0	12	1	11
1986	6	12	—	18
1985	—	5	—	5
1984	—	5	—	5

Figures include job offers reported by staff for which application was not required under the rules.

Fishing Vessels

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if she plans to continue the decommissioning scheme for fishing vessels; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: On 14 December 1993, when I announced the suspension of the introduction of days-at-sea restrictions, I said that we would be reviewing the way forward for the other elements of the fisheries conservation package, in particular decommissioning. That review has now been completed and I am pleased to announce that the two further rounds of decommissioning, this year and in 1995-96, are to go ahead as planned. Of the total of £25 million for 1993-94 to 1995-96, £8·9 million will be made available this financial year. This includes an amount corresponding to the balance remaining from last year's scheme. I hope that a further significant reduction in fleet capacity will be achieved so contributing, with licence aggregation penalties, towards our Community effort reduction targets or multi-annual guidance programme. We shall be exploring further with the industry and with the Commission what other measures we might adopt to help us to achieve our MAGP targets. We are looking particularly at technical conservation measures and at possible changes to the licensing system, but these considerations need not delay progress on the decommissioning front.

We have always made it clear that we want the decommissioning scheme to provide real long-term benefits to the fishing industry. By enabling the pressure on fish stocks to be reduced the scheme can help fisheries conservation and improve fishing prospects for the future. But the scheme will not achieve this result if the remaining vessels increase their fishing effort and so undermine the impact of decommissioning. This would be unwelcome for both the fishing industry and for taxpayers who will want to see that the expenditure is effective and provides good value for money. So as decommissioning progresses we intend to monitor the fishing effort of the remaining fleet. If it increases, we shall have to take suitable effort control measures to deal with the situation. I hope the industry will collectively exercise restraint, and so make the use of such controls in the context of this scheme unnecessary.

The Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning) Scheme 1994 was laid before Parliament today. The rules of the scheme are broadly the same as under the 1993 decommissioning scheme, as I believe that the 1993 scheme was welcomed by most in the industry and successfully removed the maximum active capacity for the available funds. Vessel owners are invited to submit tenders for the amount of decommissioning grant for which they would be prepared to scrap their vessel and surrender its licence. Applications will be ranked in terms of pounds per vessel capacity unit. Eligibility criteria similar to those in the 1993 scheme will apply but the 1994 scheme will be focused on those vessels in respect of which full pressure stock licences have been issued. This means that decommissioning will remain widely accessible but will be targeted at those vessels fishing the stocks which are the most at risk.

To be eligible for decommissioning grant, vessels must meet the following main criteria:

(a) The vessel must be registered in the UK, be over 10 m in overall length and over 10 years old at the date of application;
(b) The vessel must have spent at least 100 days at sea on fishing trips in Community waters as a UK registered vessel during each of 1992 and 1993;
(c) A current full pressure stock licence must be held in respect of the vessel;
(d) The vessel must be seaworthy: vessels over 12 m in overall length must have either a valid Department of Transport safety certificate or a letter confirming the completion of a satisfactory survey at the time of application;
(e) It must not have been approved for decommissioning under the 1993 scheme and then withdrawn;
(f) Grants will be paid only when vessels are scrapped. The applicant must provide proof that the vessel has been removed from the register and has been scrapped within the European Community using a method approved by Ministers before any grant is paid;
(g) An application for a grant must be approved before the vessel is scrapped or the vessel will not be eligible for grant;
(h) Successful applicants must submit proof of scrapping and deregistration and surrender all licences in respect of the vessel before 1 March 1995; otherwise they lose their right to a decommissioning grant.

Application forms for decommissioning grants and the accompanying explanatory leaflets will be available in local fishery offices later this week. All fishermen who have expressed an interest or whose application was unsuccessful in the first round will be sent a leaflet and form. The deadline for receipt of applications is 15 August 1994.

International Whaling Commission

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the International Whaling Commission's 46th annual meeting.

Mr. Jack: The International Whaling Commission's 46th annual meeting was held at Puerto Vallarta, Mexico from 23-27 May. The United Kingdom delegation was composed of officials from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, assisted by officials from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department of the Environment and representatives of environmental organisations.

The principal achievement of the meeting was the creation of a circumpolar Southern Ocean sanctuary for whales, within which commercial whaling will be banned indefinitely. The northern boundary of the sanctuary is 40 deg south except in the eastern Pacific, between 130 deg west and 50 deg west, where it is 60 deg south; in addition, below the existing Indian Ocean sanctuary the boundary is 55 deg south, the southern boundary of that sanctuary, so that the two sanctuaries do not overlap.

The new sanctuary will cover the main feeding grounds of all southern ocean baleen whales, including those populations of fin and sei whales that feed between 60 deg south and 40 deg south of the south Atlantic and western Pacific. There are few records of whale activity in the same latitudes in the eastern Pacific, which for this reason fall outside the sanctuary.

The creation of a Southern Ocean sanctuary represents a major step forward for the conservation of whales. It ensures that should the current moratorium on commercial whaling ever be lifted, the whale stocks in the Southern Ocean will remain protected. I am pleased to say that the United Kingdom delegation played a prominent role in devising the proposal which was ultimately adopted.

At the meeting, we restated the United Kingdom's continuing strong support for the moratorium. We accordingly voted against a request by Japan for an interim quota of 50 minke whales, to be taken by traditional whaling communities. This proposal was defeated and I am pleased to report that the moratorium remains intact.

Some progress was made on the revised management procedure, a key element in the proposed revised management scheme. The IWC's scientific committee reported that it had completed its work on the RMP, which it recommended for adoption. This was consistent with the remit it was given, when the moratorium was agreed, to devise new management procedures. In response to this recommendation, a resolution was adopted accepting that the scientific committee's work on the RMP completes the main scientific component in the development of the RMS, but making it clear that the RMP cannot be formally adopted in advance of the RMS. The resolution also emphasises that nothing it contains justifies any activity that is contrary to the moratorium.

The United Kingdom played an active role in the preparation of this resolution, which meets our own key requirements. In particular, it states clearly that the RMP will not be adopted in advance of the RMS and sets out the elements that will have to be satisfactorily included in the RMS before it can be considered for adoption. A good deal of work on these will be required. In this context, we attach particular importance to the securing of a fully effective, enforceable and internationally credible inspection and observation scheme that would ensure that any whaling operations in the future are properly controlled. Without such measures, it would not be possible for the United Kingdom to support any form of RMS.

We once again reaffirmed the importance we attached to ensuring that any whales taken in whaling operations are killed humanely. Together with New Zealand, we secured the adoption of a resolution criticising the use of the electric lance as a method of secondary killing. This drew on new research which strongly suggests that the electric lance is both ineffective and cruel. The resolution calls on Governments using this technique to develop alternative methods of secondary killing and requests the IWC to look into the matter again next year, in the light of the advice of the forthcoming workshop on humane killing. The meeting also agreed the terms of reference we proposed for this workshop, which will meet immediately before next year's annual meeting.

Last year, United Kingdom proposals on whale watching were accepted by the IWC. These led to the production of a useful report on the economic importance of whale watching. In the light of this report, the United Kingdom was able to secure support for a further proposal, which was adopted by consensus, requiring the IWC and its scientific committee to provide advice to national Governments on whale watching and to keep developments under review. This will ensure that the IWC has a permanent role to play in this expanding new industry.

It was agreed that two scientific workshops on environmental threats, dealing with the potential effects of pollution and of climate change, should be held over the next two years. We took a prominent role in the discussion of these issues in the scientific committee, and helped promote a resolution underlining the importance that the IWC attaches to the impact on whale stocks.

During the meeting, the United Kingdom delegation expressed concern about reports of illegal international trade in whale meat, and supported a successful resolution calling on all members to ensure that existing restrictions on trade in whale meat and whale products were strictly enforced and asking Governments to report all attempted evasions to the IWC.

The United Kingdom delegation also took the opportunity to criticise strongly Norway's decision to resume commercial whaling and to urge the Norwegian Government to reconsider. We were supported by a number of other delegations.

Overall, this was a very successful meeting for the United Kingdom. We achieved all our main objectives and made useful progress on a range of issues. I believe that we are now well placed to make further progress at the IWC's 47th annual meeting in Dublin next year.

The IWC remains the only effective world forum for the discussion of whaling issues; it continues to operate as a result of those countries who wish to remain its members.

EMPLOYMENT

Actively-seeking-employment Rule

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) decisions, (b) disallowances and (c) warning letters were issued in each region and Great Britain as a whole in each quarter since April 1990 in respect of actively seeking employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. Fogden to Ms Clare Short, dated 15 June 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of claimants who have been issued with warning letters for not actively seeking employment; the number of decisions on actively seeking employment; and the number of disallowances for actively seeking employment in each quarter since April 1990.

The statistics you asked for on adjudication officers' decisions on actively seeking employment for each region and for Great Britain as a whole are contained in the quarterly summary entitled "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions". Copies are held in the Library of the House. The latest available information relates to the quarter ending December 1993.

I enclose a table showing by Region, and for Great Britain, the number of warning letters issued to clients whose worksearch activity was not considered to be adequate. This information is available for the period up to March 1994.

I hope this is helpful.

HM Inspectorate of Mines

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action was taken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of mines in regard to the under-reporting of dust counts in British mines which was referred to the inspectorate earlier this year; and when the inspectorate was first aware of the under-reporting.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply of 4 November 1993]: I wish to announce that the report of the investigation by the Health and Safety Executive's inspectorate of mines into respirable dust sampling at British Coal Corporation mines is released today.

The investigation was undertaken following allegations of widespread tampering with dust sampling equipment and expressions of concern about discrepancies between the results of routine statutory sampling of respirable dust and check sampling undertaken by BCC.

The mines inspectorate has thoroughly investigated these allegations but has found no evidence to substantiate them. It has also reviewed the procedures for monitoring dust levels.

The report identifies weaknesses in the integrity of the sampling instruments and in the arrangements for their security while stored at individual mines. It therefore makes a number of sensible recommendations with the aim of ensuring long-term confidence in the dust sampling programme at mines. These include the proofing of sampling instruments against tampering and improved, more secure, arrangements for the storage of instruments at mine sites. The report also recommends that consideration should be given to the introduction of independent dust sampling and audit procedures.

I have today sent a copy of the report to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) and for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) who wrote to me on the matter. Copies have also been placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the Child Support Agency's target time for dealing with complaints; and how many complaints have been dealt with in that time;

(2) how many complaints have been logged by the Child Support Agency computerised complaints monitoring system;

(3) how many complaints have been received by the Child Support Agency since its inception;

(4) what form of redress is available to the complainant if a complaint to the Child Support Agency is not dealt with in the time stipulated for a reply;

(5) whether he will publish the results of the review into the complaints procedures of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Dr. Tony Wright, dated 15 June 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about customer complaints received by the Child Support Agency.

Your have asked for details of the number of such complaints received, the Agency's target time for dealing with complaints and how many have been dealt with in that time. The Agency's Charter contains a stated aim to acknowledge written complaints within two days of receipt and respond to complaints within 10 working days. From 5 April to 31 March 1994, a total of 10,886 complaints were recorded and, of these, 4,910 were cleared within 10 working days.

The first year of the Agency's operations has stimulated a great deal of activity and I am aware that our performance in this area falls below the standard we aim to provide for clients. As part of the normal management process we are continually examining ways in which our service to clients can be improved.

The Agency's computerised complaints monitoring system is under development and it is planned to introduce it later this year.

Your ask about the redress available where a client is dissatisfied with the way a complaint had been handled. The Agency's Charter explains that where something has gone wrong, the Agency will be happy to apologise, give an explanation and put the matter right. The client can speak or write to the Customer Services Manager in the centre dealing with the case. If they are not satisfied they can write directly to the manager of the centre or ultimately, to the Chief Executive.

The Agency has conducted an internal review of its complaints monitoring procedures as part of an ongoing arrangement to examine various management issues. There are no plans to publish a report.

I hope this is helpful.

War Pensions

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give details of the war pensions trial complaints system; on what date the system went into operation; and how many complaints have been received and processed to date.

Mr. Hague: This is a matter for Mr. Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Dr. Tony Wright, dated 14 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the War Pensions trial complaints system.

The War Pensions Agency has a well established complaints system operating throughout the Agency. This system ensures that complaints are dealt with in accordance with our Charter Standards.

The Agency was launched on 1 April 1994 and since that date there has existed a complaints monitoring system within the War Pensions Parliamentary Group. This system has now been extended to include the War Pensions Customer Services, War Pensions Helpline and War Pensioners' Welfare Service. It is being monitored by the War Pensions Customer Services Manager to assess the suitability for use by the whole of the Agency. It will be evaluated in the autumn of this year.

A total of 186 complaints have been received by the Parliamentary Group in our first month of operation as an Agency.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Maintenance Assessments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many absent parents have had their maintenance assessments reduced as a result of the regulatory changes introduced on 7 February; and what has been the average reduction per week to date;

(2) how many absent parents have had their maintenance assessments reduced as a result of changes to the parent-with-care allowance introduced on 7 February; and what has been the average reduction per week to date.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Ros Hepplewhite, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ros Hepplewhite to Mr. Ingram, dated 15 June 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the effect of the changes to Child Support introduced on 7 February 1994.

The total number of cases where a reduction in the maintenance assessment occurred due to the policy changes was 43,800 which includes 4,000 cases where liability was not reduced at the time as the change was below £1. In these cases the change would be taken into account at the next review of circumstances.

Information on the average amount by which the assessment reduced is available for the 93 per cent. of cases that were reassessed automatically by the computer system. In these cases the average reduction was £9·00 a week. Information is not available for the remaining cases which were reassessed clerically.

Specific information is not yet available on the effect of the changes to parent with care allowances. Arrangements are being made to obtain this information.

I hope that you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency (Complaints)

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what date the OTIS—"Opportunity to Improve Service"—computerised system for complaints operated by the Benefits Agency was inaugurated; how many complaints have been logged from that date; what percentage of those complaints and suggestions have resulted in a change to the agency's policy or procedure; and what plans there are for such a system to be adopted by other agencies.

Mr. Burt: The operation of the OTIS computerised system in the Benefits Agency is the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. Tony Wright, dated 14 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the OTIS computerised system for complaints in the Benefits Agency and what plans there are for the system to be adopted by other agencies.

(OTIS) Opportunity to Improve Service was introduced in Newcastle Benefits Directorate on 1 July 1991, initially on a pilot basis. It proved successful and is now in operation in Newcastle Pensions Directorate, Overseas Benefits Directorate and Child Benefit Centre but is not used throughout the Agency.

Some Districts are using IT systems to record and analyse customer feedback. However, many offices do not receive enough complaints to justify the need to adopt an IT system for analysing customer feedback. The Benefits Agency is in the process of producing a "good practice guide" to be issued to all business units to ensure that their local systems are operating to full potential.

The Information available on complaints logged on OTIS is 1,404 for Overseas Benefits Directorate for the period 1 July 1991 to 31 March 1994, 1,906 for Newcastle Pensions Directorate for the same period, and 5,499 for Child Benefit Centre for the period 2 January 1992 to 25 May 1994.

As OTIS is used to identify trends rather than monitor individual complaints or suggestions, statistics comparing the number of comments with any change in procedure are not kept.

I understand from the other DSS Agencies that they have no plans to introduce OTIS but some are introducing IT systems to meet their own business needs.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many invalidity benefit awards have been (a) reviewed, (b) disallowed following review and (c) reinstated on appeal during each of the last 12 months in the Wrexham Maelor and Mid Wales district and North Wales Coast district of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Scott: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. David Hanson, dated 14 June 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about invalidity Benefit (IVB) awards in the Mid Wales and Maelor, and North Wales Coast Districts.

The information is available in the format requested, and has been provided in appendices 1 and 2.

The Mid Wales and Maelor District of the Benefits Agency comprises Wrexham District Office (DO) and Newtown Branch Office (BO). The North Wales Coast District comprises Rhyl DO, and Colwyn Bay and Deeside BO's.

The statistics provided are taken from clerical and computer records maintained in the Districts' offices.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Social Fund

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken to decide an application for assistance from the social fund nationally; and what is the average length of time taken at (a) East Nottinghamshire, (b) North Nottinghamshire and (c) West Nottinghamshire Benefits Agency offices.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paddy Tipping, dated 14 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the average time taken to decide a Social Fund (SF) application nationally and in the Benefits Agency's (BA) East Nottinghamshire, North Nottinghamshire, and West Nottinghamshire Districts.

The clearance of SF applications is measured in terms of "x" per cent. of applications cleared in "y" days, and not as an average of the time to decide each individual application. You will be aware that the SF comprises of Community Care Grants (CCG), Budgeting Loans (BL), Crisis Loans (CL), Cold Weather Payments (CWP), Funeral Payments (FP) and Maternity Payments (MP). Each element of the SF has separate and different "x in y" primary and secondary targets, with the exception of CWPs. For CWPs, eligible customers are identified and paid automatically and do not have to make a formal claim.

I have provided at Annex A the national and the three Nottinghamshire districts' details for the month of April 1994 (latest available data).

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Computerised Benefit Calculation Models

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the use of computerised benefit calculation models by his Department; and what policy applies to claimants wishing to obtain access to these systems;

(2) how much his Department has spent on introducing computerised benefit calculation models throughout the Benefits Agency network; how many terminals are currently operational; and if he will list the Benefits Agency facilities where access to these terminals is available to claimants.

Mr. Burt: The administration of benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Brian Donohue, dated 14 June 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking about (i) the use of computerised benefit calculation models by his Department; and what policy applies to claimants wishing to obtain access to these systems and (ii) how much his Department has spent on introducing computerised benefit calculation models throughout the Benefits Agency network; how many terminals are currently operational; and if he will list the facilities where access to these terminals is available to claimants.

The Benefits Agency provides a benefit advice and information service from all its District Offices and also from a number of telephone enquiry lines. Staff are supported in this task by a number of tools, including the recently introduced Integrated Benefits Information System, a computerised system which includes the facility to produce an estimate of benefit entitlement during an interview with a customer.

The Agency is currently conducting research to determine whether customers would welcome self service facilities to produce benefit calculations, given the large volume of data entry required to produce meaningful estimates of benefit entitlement. Meanwhile there are no such facilities available.

There are, however, computer programmes developed by the Agency which provide general information about benefits such as condition of entitlement, how to claim, rates, leaflets etc. The most common of these is the "West Country Social Security Guide" which can be installed on machines suitable for customer use, where they are available. Such machines are installed in both BA locations and other outlets provided by Local Authorities, Social and Welfare organisations and Citizen's Advice Bureaux, amongst others.

There are at least 1,100 terminals running the automated guide. The precise number of these suitable for direct public access is unknown.

Finally, the eventual cost of developing, implementing and supporting the full IBIS toolset is estimated to be £3·8 million.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of carers currently entitled to (a) invalidity benefit and (b) unemployment benefit will be eligible for the new incapacity benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available.

EDUCATION

Clinical Academic Staff

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what assessment he has made of the effects of the delay in translating the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body award to clinical academic staff on the latter's morale;

(2) if he will make a statement on the steps taken since October 1991 to find a long-term solution to the annual problem of implementing the translation of the NHS pay award to clinical academic staff;

(3) what steps he is taking to ensure that young doctors entering academic medicine will be assured of sufficient, well structured, and appropriately rewarded career posts;

(4) if he will give an assurance to the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals that he will meet in full the difference between the cost of clinical and non-clinical pay awards for 1994;

(5) if he will make a statement on the process of implementing the 1994 doctors' pay award for clinical academic staff.

Mr. Boswell: The negotiation of pay awards for clinical academic staff is a matter for the university employers, not for my right hon. Friend. Universities will be required to fund pay awards for clinical and non-clinical academic staff in 1994 from within their existing resources. It is also for the university employers to decide how best to recruit, retain and motivate their clinical academic staff.

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Forth: No special instructions are issued to the custody guards for dealing with incidents arising from either category. The guards' operational standing orders direct them to notify the local police where the actions of any individuals in bordering public streets are judged to pose a threat to the Department's perimeter security. No problems of this nature have arisen in the last three months.

Suspensions and Expulsions

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what action he is taking to reduce the number of children suspended or expelled from schools in (a) Humberside and (b) England.

Mr. Forth: Head teachers are responsible for securing discipline in their schools and for exercising the power of exclusion. The Department has recently issued guidance to all schools aimed at promoting consistent practice in the use of exclusion and ensuring that permanent exclusion is used as a last resort. Changes in the law governing exclusions have been made in the Education Act 1993, which abolishes the category of indefinite exclusion; places a limit of 15 school days in any one term on fixed-term exclusions; and enables the Secretary of State to place time limits on the operation of exclusion procedures, to reduce to a minimum the time spent by an excluded pupil out of school. These provisions are intended to come into effect on 1 September.

Lancashire Colleges

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total funding given to each college and sixth form tertiary college in Lancashire for the years 1992-93 and 1993-94; and when the figure for the year 1[illegible]4-95 will be available.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council's total recurrent funding allocations to colleges in Lancashire for 1993-94, covering the 16-month period 1 April 1993 to 31 July 1994, and those for the 12 months ending 31 July 1995, are given in the table.

There are no comparable figures available for 1992-93, when the colleges were funded by their local authority using different bases.

Cash Limits

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what changes he plans to announce to cash limits on votes within his responsibility for 1994-95.

Mr. Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimates, the cash limits for class X, vote 1—schools, research and miscellaneous services—and for vote 2—higher and further education—will be reduced as follows:

Class and vote	Current cash limit £	Change £	Revised cash limit £
X.1	800,328,000	– 59,000	800,269,000
X.2	5,787,121,000	– 114,328,000	5,672,793,000

The reduction of £59,000 on class X, vote 1 represents a transfer to class X, vote 2 for increased provision for grants to further education establishments for the education of the children of travellers, refugees and displaced persons.

The reduction of £114,328,000 on class X, vote 2 is the net effect of a transfer of £113,600,000 to class X, vote 3 to increase provision for grant in aid to the Further Education Funding Council for student number-related payments; transfers from provision for grant in aid to the Higher Education Funding Council of £245,000 to the Welsh Office for payment to the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales in respect of students on diploma in social work courses in Wales, and £542,000 to the Office of Science and Technology as the council's contribution towards class 3—super-computing time; and a transfer from class X, vote 1 of £59,000 for additional provision for grants to further education establishments for the education of children of travellers, refugees and displaced persons.

Science and Mathematics

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he expects to answer the responses to his consultation paper on the supply and demand of newly qualified young people in science and mathematics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The consultation paper invited responses by 30 June. We shall consider what further action to take in the light of those responses.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Specialists' Waiting Lists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people not on waiting lists for treatment were waiting to see a specialist in the national health service at the end of March.

Mr. Ancram: There were 62,862 people waiting for their first out-patient appointment in Northern Ireland at 31 March 1994.

"Making Belfast Work"

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what evaluation has been carried out of projects for which "Making Belfast Work" money has been provided in further education projects in inner Belfast in each of the last four years.

Mr. Ancram: Since the "Making Belfast Work" initiative was introduced in 1988, all further education projects have been evaluated by the Department's inspectorate.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much has been spent on further education in inner Belfast through the "Making Belfast Work" programme in each of the last four years; and on which projects the money has been spent.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

£000's

Project	1990-91	1991-92	Year [1] 1992-93	1993-94	Total

HEALTH

Staffing Levels

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list by regional health authority changes in staff numbers in 1993; and, of these, how many were nurses.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available.

Hospital Consultant Posts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 9 May, Official Report, column 2, on vacant hospital consultancies, how many consultant posts were vacant in each region on 30 September 1992.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is shown in the table. This indicates consultant vacancies notified to the Department as at 30 September 1992. As a snapshot of vacancies on a single date they may not fairly reflect the trend for the number of vacancies over the year as a whole.

Drugs Advisory Committee

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library a list of the current members of the national health service drugs advisory committee, together with a copy of its annual report and information on the place and frequency of its meetings, indicating whether such meetings are open to the public.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 28 February at cols 605-6. The advisory committee on national health service drugs holds meetings as necessary to fulfil its role of advising United Kingdom Health Ministers about the composition of schedules 10 and 11 of the NHS (General Medical Services) Regulations 1992: The committee does not publish an annual report. Meetings are not open to the public.

Midwifery

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on an autonomous midwifery profession.

Mr. Sackville: The Government recognise that midwives are educated and trained to take full care of women during the antenatal, intrapartum and post-natal period, referring to a doctor if there are any deviations from the normal. "Changing Childbirth", the report of the expert group, fully supports this ethos and the national health service is working towards the implementation of the report's recommendations within a five year time-scale.

Electro-convulsive Therapy

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ban electro-convulsive treatment on patients under the age of 18 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding) on 17 February at col. 926.

Sight Tests

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sight tests were carried out in each of the last five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The numbers of national health service sight tests paid for in the last five financial years for which figures are available in England are shown in the table. Information for 1993-94 is not yet available.

Number of NHS sight tests[1] paid for by financial year

England

Year	Number
[2]1989-90	5,279,750
[2]1990-91	4,153,660
1991-92	4,979,420
1992-93	5,527,590

[1] The number of private sight tests is not collected.

[2] From 1 April 1989, NHS sight tests were restricted to certain eligible groups in the population. The figures for 1989-90 included 1·82 million sight tests paid for in 1989-90 but conducted in 1988-89 under the previous scheme. The remaining 4·22 million were conducted and paid for in 1989-90 which do not constitute a full 12 months of the new scheme. The figures for 1990-91 which do represent 12 months under the new scheme are not therefore directly comparable with those for 1989-90.

Pay Settlements

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the percentage increases in the pay settlements or offers for this current year to doctors, dentists, pharmacists and optometrists.

Dr. Mawhinney: Hospital and community health service doctors and dentists have been awarded a 3 per cent. increase in salaries. General medical practitioners have been awarded a 3 per cent. increase in the average net intended income and a 1·4 per cent. increase in their expenses provisions. General dental practitioners have been awarded a 3 per cent. increase in the gross fee for each item of service and capitation payment. Hospital pharmacists have been offered 1·75 per cent. and negotiations are continuing. No offer has yet been made to optometrists whose claim was received on 25 May.

Waiting Times

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, (1) pursuant to her answer of 11 May, Official Report, column 157, what is the total cost of reducing the waiting list so that (a) no one waits more than three months for hospital treatment and (b) the average waiting time is reduced to two months;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 21 April, Official Report, column 668, what is the total cost of providing an out-patient appointment to all patients within (a) six weeks and (b) three months on referral by a general practitioner.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Administrative Staff

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the effect of the change in number of managers, administration and clerical staff in the NHS since 1989-90.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service needs good managers. As part of the reforms we have deliberately strengthened NHS management, particularly the finance and personnel functions, to provide the quality and number of managers needed to run a £32.2 billion organisation which employs over 900,000 people. The results speak for themselves. For every 100 patients treated in 1989-90 we expect to treat about 121 this year. Average in-patient waiting times have been reduced from nine months to five months. NHS managers deserve credit for their part in these achievements. We are determined to maximise the proportion of NHS expenditure devoted to direct patient care and have recently brought forward proposals to further streamline the central management of the NHS.

Nurses and Midwives

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many whole-time equivalent NHS nursing and midwifery staff were employed on each grade and pay point of the clinical grades, educational grades, and senior nursing and midwifery pay spine in 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993, broken down by ethnic groups.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Respite and Continuing Care Beds

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds in each health authority are available for (a) respite care and (b) continuing care.

Mr. Bowis: Information collected centrally on numbers of beds does not include the classifications "respite care" and "continuing care". Information on national health service beds in England, classified by ward type, is published in "Bed availability for England (Financial year 1992-93)", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to impose an obligation on each district health authority to provide (a) respite care beds for Alzheimer's disease sufferers and (b) continuing care beds.

Mr. Bowis: Authorities should have a comprehensive range of services available to meet the various needs of those suffering from Alzheimer's disease.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each health authority which does not provide psychogeriatric continuing care beds; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is a matter for local purchasers to determine the level and type of services purchased for their local populations in the light of local circumstances, resources and clinical practice.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 28 April, Official Report, column 307, how many hospital consultant posts have been vacant, by specialty, in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Dr. Mawhinney [pursuant to his reply, 9 May 1994, c. 76]: I regret that there were inaccuracies in the 1991 and 1992 data.

The correct figures are given in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Ukraine

10. Sir Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with the Ukraine.

Mr. Hurd: We have close and friendly relations with Ukraine. I visited Kiev in May where I had useful talks with the Ukrainian leadership and reaffirmed our strong support for Ukrainian independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

20. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to meet his counterparts in the European Union to discuss its future development.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have regular discussions on a wide range of European Union issues with my European counterparts at meetings of the General Affairs Council. The next meeting of the Council is scheduled for 18-19 July.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the German Foreign Minister about priorities for the German presidency of the EU.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I discussed German presidency priorities with my German colleague at the Anglo-German summit on 27 April.

26. Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken to help combat fraud in the EU in (a) spending on the common agricultural policy, (b) structural funds and (c) the cohesion budget.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced a joint action proposal under title VI of the treaty on European Union aimed at combating serious fraud against the Community budget. The Commission has recently published its 1993 annual report on the fight against fraud and tabled an anti-fraud strategy which is under consideration by the Council. Both describe a number of existing and new measures to fight fraud against the Community budget, and in particular fraud against the CAP. The United Kingdom has pressed for demanding new provisions on value for money and reporting requirements to govern the structural and cohesion funds which are designed to reduce the scope for fraud and waste.

China

22. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit China to discuss matters of mutual interest.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to visit China but expects to meet the Chinese Foreign Minister in September, possibly in New York, to discuss matters of mutual interest. I plan to visit China myself before too long.

25. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in China.

Mr. Goodlad: While welcoming the recent releases of certain individuals, we remain deeply concerned about continuing reports of human rights abuses in China, including the widespread arrest or detention of individuals for free expression of their political or religious beliefs, and the situation in Tibet.

Visegrad Countries

23. Sir Roger Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the prospects of EC membership for the Visegrad countries.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Copenhagen European Council in June 1993 agreed that the associated countries of central and eastern Europe that so wished, including the four Visegrad countries, should join the European Union as soon as they were able to assume the obligations of membership by satisfying the economic and political conditions required. We are fully committed to this objective, and reacted positively to the applications of Hungary and Poland in March and April this year.

24. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current state of United Kingdom relations with Japan.

Mr. Goodlad: United Kingdom relations with Japan are excellent. We are developing close co-operation on international issues, investment, trade, science and technology and many other areas.

Rwanda

27. Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the UN action in Rwanda.

28. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Rwanda.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The UK voted in favour of UN Security Council resolutions 918 and 925 which authorise an expansion in the United Nations Aid Mission in Rwanda force to a total of 5,500 and mandate it to provide protection and support to civilians at risk.

The UK worked with other states in framing both resolutions to ensure that UNAMIR was given the most effective mandate possible. We will continue our efforts to ensure that the force operates with maximum effect.

The UK will bear 6·37 per cent. of the cost of UNAMIR. We have also contributed over £11 million directly to the aid effort in Rwanda.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to commit British forces to United Nations operations in Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UK has not been asked to contribute troops to the UN peacekeeping operation in Rwanda.

Gulf States

29. Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relations with the Gulf states.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I visited the Gulf region from 30 May to 3 June 1994 and found that the United Kingdom's relations with the Gulf states were in excellent shape.

Intergovernmental Conference

30. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to be able to announce his priorities for the next intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: As my colleagues and I have made clear in a number of recent statements, our priority is to achieve a Europe that is prosperous, outward looking, free trading, decentralised, flexible and democratic.

European Security

31. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet his French counterpart to discuss the future of European security; and what discussions Her Majesty's Government have already had with the French Government in the last 12 months.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary sees Mr. Juppé frequently, and European security issues remain one of the priorities on their agenda. We likewise hold frequent discussions with the French Government at all levels to discuss European security and other matters.

Indonesia

32. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current state of relations between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Indonesia.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom and Indonesia enjoy excellent bilateral relations. The importance of the relationship is well illustrated by the large number of high-level visits in both directions. We contribute substantially to Indonesia's infrastructure development. British industry plays a significant role in this. British exports to Indonesia rose to their highest ever level—£331 million—in 1993. In 1992, the last year for which we have complete figures, and when British firms invested $996 million there, Britain was the largest European investor in Indonesia.

Angola

33. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet his counterpart in Angola to discuss the situation in that country.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to do so. However, my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State and Minister for Overseas Development last met Mr. Venancio da Moura on 25 April.

Middle East

34. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the middle east peace process.

39. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made towards peace in the middle east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the completion of Israeli withdrawal from Gaza and Jericho on 18 May. We and our European partners are providing practical help to the new Palestinian Administration, including the police force. We hope recent US efforts on the Syrian track will facilitate progress towards a comprehensive peace.

35. Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Jericho to meet the new Palestinian Administration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no such plans at present.

Philippines

36. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations, including trade relations with the Philippines.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom and the Philippines enjoy excellent bilateral relations. The improving economic position and the political stability achieved under President Ramos's Administration has provided an excellent basis for the development of bilateral trade. United Kingdom exports to the Philippines increased by almost 50 per cent. in 1993 to £306 million.

Lockerbie

37. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he made to the written request of Edwin Bollier to be shown the timing equipment, retrieved from Pan Am 103 in the Tundergarth area near Lockerbie, for purposes of establishing whether the equipment was sold to the Stasi in East Germany or to the Libyan Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. Questions concerning the evidence revealed by the Lockerbie investigation are for the Scottish prosecuting authorities and the police. My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has repeatedly made it clear that he cannot comment on details of the evidence available while criminal proceedings are pending.

Overseas Investments

38. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to protect the investments of British companies overseas.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, working in close consultation with the Department of Trade and Industry, actively negotiates bilateral investment promotion and protection agreements with many countries worldwide. Since 1975 we have concluded 66 IPPAs, including eight so far this year. More are under negotiation. We are also supporting work in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development on obligations under exisiting OECD investment protection measures and on a possible wider investment instrument.

Wilton Park Executive Agency

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has yet begun his review of the Wilton Park executive agency.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A review of the agency status of Wilton Park will begin in September 1994. As a next steps agency, the performance of Wilton Park will be evaluated and its activities will be subjected to the normal prior options tests set out in the 1993 next steps review, Cm 2430.

Comments and contributions from those with an interest in Wilton Park and its work would be welcome, and should be sent by 2 September 1994 to Christopher Battiscombe, CMG, Assistant Under-Secretary (Public Departments), Foreign and Commonwealth Office, Room G/107, Old Admiralty Building, London SW1A 2AF.

Wartime Special Operations Executive

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to release more records of the wartime Special Operations Executive.

Mr. Hurd: I said in my answer on 20 October 1993 that the first batch of files covering SOE activities in the far east would be available to the public from 21 October 1993. The next batch, on Scandinavia, were opened to the public on 2 June. A third batch, on the middle east and north Africa, will be available in late July.

Cash Limits

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what changes he proposes to make in his Department's diplomatic wing cash limits and running costs for 1994-95.

Mr. Goodlad: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class II, vote 2—other external relations—will be increased by £204,105,000.

The cash limit for class II, vote 2—other external relations—will be increased by £204,105,000 from £211,404,000 to £415,509,000, mainly to take account of contributions to United Nations peacekeeping operations. The increase is partly offset by appropriations in aid. The balance will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

EC Legislation

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish (a) the number of proposals for principal legislation put forward by the European Commission in the first five months of 1994 and (b) the total number of European Commission proposals for principal legislation for each of the previous four years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Up to the end of May 1994, the Commission had made 25 proposals for principal legislation. The total number of proposals for principal legislation during the last four years was as follows:

1991: 111
1992: 89
1993: 75

European Council

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement on the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cash Limits

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to the Office of Telecommunications cash limits and running costs limit for 1994-95.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 10 will be increased by £435,000 from £8,624,000 to £9,059,000 and the running cost limit has been increased by £435,000 from £8,192,000 to £8,627,000.

The supplementary estimate is required to increase the provision for running costs to ensure that pro-competition policies are implemented.

The increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what changes will be made to his Department's cash limits and running costs limit for 1994-95.

Mr. Heseltine: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary revised estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 1—support for business, consumer and investor protection, energy programmes and administration—will be reduced by £4,400,000 from £1,177,477,000 to £1,173,077,000.

A reduction in the gross provision from £1,402,638,000 to £1,398,238,000 fully accounts for this amount. This reduction results from a transfer to the Scottish Office of £4,000,000 following arrangements agreed for the sale of the National Engineering Laboratory and the transfer to the Scottish and Welsh Offices of £400,000 following a restructuring of the Design Council.

There are some other changes in the allocation of provision. These include £700,000 of expenditure to provide support for the activities on a regional supply network. This is financed by a corresponding reduction in the gross running costs limit from £328,700,000 to £328,000,000.

Coal Review White Paper

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the first of the annual energy reports proposed in last year's coal review White Paper.

Mr. Eggar: Volume 1 of the report, "Markets in Transition", has been published today. Volume 2, "Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", was published on 25 April. I have placed copies in the Libraries of the House.

The energy report is an important new document. It shows that we have made considerable progress towards true competition in energy supply. Most customers are now benefiting from lower prices, in real terms, than under the former state-owned monopolies. I expect emerging competition to maintain this strong downward pressure on prices. Clearly, there remains some way to go as the title of the report, "Markets in Transition", reflects. But the signs are very encouraging so far.

The energy industries are central to the success of the United Kingdom economy. The provision of efficiently produced and secure energy is a key element in the United Kingdom's competitiveness. But a free market needs information to help consumers and investors plan with more confidence and the Government recognise that they are uniquely well placed to provide much of this information—hence the need for the report.

The report provides valuable background and signposts to further information, for those involved, or thinking of involvement, in those markets. Its readable format also makes it a useful resource to those who are simply interested in the energy sector rather than actively involved in it.

Gas Industry

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the process employed by him in the recruitment of the Director General of Ofgas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 14 June 1994, Official Report, column 416.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff of Ofgas met officials of his Department to prepare the consultation document "Competition and Choice in the Gas Market".

Mr. Eggar: My officials met most of the senior staff of Ofgas on several occasions in the course of preparing the consultation document, "Competition and Choice in the Gas Market".

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much time staff of the Office of Gas Supply spent meeting officials of his Department to prepare the consultation document "Competition and Choice in the Gas Market".

Mr. Eggar: This information is not available. There were many different meetings between staff at different levels.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the average number of staff employed by the Office of Gas Supply for each six-month period since its establishment.

Mr. Eggar: Information on staffing levels is given in the annual reports made by the Director General of Gas Supply to the Secretary of State. These reports are laid before Parliament as required by section 39(3) of the Gas Act 1986.

Public Utilities

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to commission an inquiry to examine the implications of abolishing standing charges on domestic gas, electricity and telephone bills.

Mr. Heseltine: I have no such plans.

Fire Safety

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the grades and qualifications of each member of each committee which contributed to the review of the fire safety legislation and its enforcement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The team undertaking the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement consisted of a grade 5 from the Department of the Environment, an area director from the Health and Safety Executive and a grade 7 from the Home Office.

They were assisted by a steering group, chaired by a grade 3 from my Department, and made up of a number of civil servants of various grades from the Home Office, the Department of the Environment, the Health and Safety Executive, the Scottish Office, my Department and the No. 10 policy unit.

The review team was also able to draw upon expert advice from an advisory group made up of the president of the Institute of Building Control, a serving chief fire officer, a partner in a firm of building designers and planners, the director of the Fire Protection Association and two fire safety managers from manufacturing and service sector companies.

I have nothing further to add on the review to the answer given to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 427-28.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will publish the scrutiny team's report on fire safety legislation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 427-28.

Capital Goods

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the value of Export Credits Guarantee Department support for long-term capital goods business for each year since 1979.

Mr. Heseltine: The value of ECGD support for capital goods business since 1979-80 is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	3,816
1980-81	3,668
1981-82	7,340
1982-83	8,440
1983-84	3,199
1984-85	2,458
1985-86	1,519
1986-87	2,601
1987-88	1,712
1988-89	2,067
1989-90	1,959
1990-91	2,300
1991-92	2,095
1992-93	3,802

The totals for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are not strictly comparable with the others in the table as they are based on a now discarded definition of the value of ECGD's support.

In his statement of the 11 May 1994, my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade announced a provisional figure for the value of ECGD support for capital goods business in 1993-94 of nearly £4.1 billion. Fuller details will be provided in ECGD's forthcoming annual report for 1993-94.

Industrial Investment (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the financial amount of inward industrial investment within the Greater London area in each of the last three years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is not available in the form required. There are no published or recorded data on inward investment for London alone.

Thermal Oxide Reprocessing Plant

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the extent of the damage of the leak of nitric acid which occurred in THORP in March 1994.

Mr. Eggar: This is a management matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the principal import and export competing industries; what was the output (a) in 1990, (b) at its peak together with the year, of that peak since 1964 and (c) at the latest available date.

Mr. Needham: Detailed information on industrial production prior to 1978 is not readily obtainable on current classifications. The available information, for those industries where total United Kingdom overseas trade—imports plus exports—exceeded £5 billion in 1992, is given in the table:

SIC(80) Activity heading	Brief description	Index of production (1990 = 100)
		1978	Peak	(Year)	1993
2512	Basic general organic chemicals	84	120	(1992)	116
3302	Electronic data processing equipment	13	142	(1993)	142
3453	Active components and electronic sub-assemblies	43	103	(1992)	99
3510	Motor vehicles and their engines	132	132	(1978)	91
3530	Motor vehicle parts	92	102	(1993)	102
3640	Aerospace equipment manufacturing and repairing	50	100	(1990)	86

Manufacturing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) pursuant to his oral statement of 24 May, Official Report, column 183, what has been the change in employment in manufacturing since 1979; what is his estimate of how many jobs have been lost (a) because of lack of training, (b) lack of investment and (c) other non-price factors.

(2) what consideration he has given, in drawing up his White Paper, "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win" to the reasons for the change in the number of jobs in manufacturing industry since 1973; and if he will publish his estimate of the number of such jobs which have been lost as a result of (a) the change in the real exchange rate, (b) a poorly trained work force, (c) insufficient investment and (d) inefficient management.

Mr. Sainsbury: There has been a general decline in manufacturing employment in the developed world for many years. Since 1979, manufacturing employment in the United Kingdom has fallen by 3 million. Factors behind the decline include major improvements in productivity and the classification of jobs where activities such as transport are contracted out.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assumption he made about the desirable level of output per man on United Kingdom manufacturing industry relative to that in (a) the USA, (b) Germany and (c) Japan in drawing up the White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win".

Mr. Sainsbury: The White Paper on competitiveness makes clear that United Kingdom industry must continually improve its productivity if it is to prosper in the increasingly competitive world marketplace. During the 1980s, output per man in United Kingdom manufacturing grew more quickly than in the USA, Germany or Japan.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the total number of workers employed in (a) Japanese, (b) French, (c) German and (d) American-owned manufacturing plants in Britain.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest information refers to 1991 and is listed in the "Report on the Census of Production", summary volume, table 18, Business Monitor PA 1002, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade further to his White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win", what assessment he has made of the reason for the change since 1990 in the output of United Kingdom industries engaged in producing internationally traded goods; and what was the percentage of change from the recent peak to the present day.

Mr. Sainsbury: Industrial production in April was slightly below its June 1990 peak, but was 1·7 per cent. above the average for 1990 as a whole and 8 per cent. higher than its trough in May 1992. In the latest three months, industrial production in the United Kingdom rose by 4·5 per cent. compared to a year earlier, while in Germany it rose by less than 2 per cent. and fell in France, Italy and Japan. The recovery in industrial production shows the benefit of low inflation, low interest rates and sound public finances.

Pepper Gas

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research has been undertaken following the Hinsworth committee recommendations in preparation for future authorisation of the use, manufacture or export of oleorsin capsicum pepper gas within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

The Home Office police scientific development branch has collated scientific information available on oleorsin capsicum, commonly known as pepper spray. The study concluded that although pepper sprays are used extensively by law enforcement agencies in the United States of America there were a number of unanswered issues relating to the safety of these sprays. One particular concern is whether capsaicin, the active ingredient of OC, might cause cancer to those using or exposed to the spray.

We have commissioned further scientific research into this aspect in consultation with the Department of Health. Following this research, which is expected to take six months to complete, we will be in a better position to judge whether pepper sprays are appropriate for police use in this country.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the sale, distribution or possession of pepper gas by members of the public.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

Under section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968, as amended, devices capable of discharging a noxious substance are classed as prohibited weapons. We consider that devices such as pepper sprays are covered by the terms of section 5(1)(b). This means that their possession, acquistion, manufacture, sale or transfer is prohibited without the authority of the Secretary of State.

SCOTLAND

Health Workers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the planned numbers of health visitors, district nurses, school nurses, community psychiatric nurses, health visitor students and district nurse students for each year from 1995 to 1999.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is not available from data held centrally.

Child Sexual Abuse

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases relating to the sexual abuse of children were proceeded against in Scotland in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is impossible to identify all of the cases of sexual abuse where children were involved because the Scottish Office Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences does not contain information on the victims of crime. The table lists those sexual offences within the classification which by definition involve persons aged under 16.

Persons proceeded against in Scottish courts where the main crime was sexual abuse of persons aged under 16

Glasgow Royal Infirmary

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the outcome for each one of the patients for whom an intensive care unit bed at Glasgow royal infirmary was requested on 29 January at a time when all five intensive care beds were full.

Mr. Stewart: The outcome for each of the six patients for whom a request for an intensive care bed was made was as follows:

First patient	—transferred from the burns unit, Glasgow Royal Infirmary (GRI), to the intensive care unit, Western Infirmary, Glasgow.
Second patient	—transferred from emergency theatre, GRI, to the intensive care unit, Southern General, Glasgow.
Third patient	—following discussion between the referring consultant and the consultant in charge of intensive care, patient remained in the geriatric assessment unit, GRI.
Fourth patient	—tranferred from Inverclyde hospital to the intensive care unit, Southern General, Glasgow.
Fifth patient	—underwent emergency surgery at GRI but died in theatre.
Sixth patient	—remained in the medical receiving unit, GRI.

GPs (Night Visits)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what trends general practitioners have experienced in the number of night visits over the last 25 years; and what is his assessment of the reasons for those trends.

Mr. Stewart: The information available centrally is for 1976-77 onwards and is as follows:

Financial year	Number of night visits
1976-77	81,614
1977-78	80,989
1978-79	83,909
1979-80	84,620
1980-81	83,347
1981-82	90,649
1982-83	96,231
1983-84	103,106
1984-85	107,598
1985-86	119,130
1986-87	138,104
1987-88	122,747
1988-89	132,640
1989-90	143,556
1990-91	206,946
1991-92	244,310
1992-93	232,201
1993-94	245,158

Notes:

1. The figures for financial years 1976-77 to 1989-90 are derived from total accrued payments to general medical practitioners in Scotland for night visits for each of those years.
2. The figures for 1990-91 to 1992-93 are the total numbers of night visit claims for which GMPs received payment in each of those years.
3. The figure for 1993-94 is an estimate based on the total number of night visit claims for which GMPs received payment during the first six months of that year.

NHS Complaints

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what examination is being made by the Scottish Office of the current procedures for dealing with complaints within the national health service following the report on this matter produced by the Department of Health.

Mr. Stewart: The report entitled "Being Heard", prepared by an independent committee under the chairmanship of Professor Alan Wilson, vice chancellor of Leeds university, makes recommendations for changes to the procedures for making and handling of complaints throughout the United Kingdom. The report was published on 11 May and my noble and learned Friend the Minister of State has invited comments on the proposals contained in the report. These should be submitted by Friday 12 August.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements exist in each health board in Scotland for dealing with patients' complaints.

Mr. Stewart: Health boards operate on the basis of two statutory complaints procedures, as set out in the reply that I gave to the hon. Member on 6 May 1994 at column 687 and of a non-statutory procedure for dealing with complaints which relate to the clinical judgment of medical and dental staff in hospitals.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints have been received by each of the health boards in Scotland during each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart: This information is not available for the full period requested. Information about complaints is now published in a series of quarterly complaints bulletins copies of which are held in the Library of the House. The first of these bulletins covers the period from 1 January to 31 March 1993.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the Lord Advocate's estimate of the likely length of criminal proceedings arising out of the Lockerbie disaster.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Once the two Libyan accused have been fully committed in custody for trial before a Scottish court the prosecution authorities must be prepared to commence the trial within 110 days from that date—which means effectively, within 120 days of their being brought before the court following arrest. It is open to the defence to seek a postponement of trial and the court may, for that purpose, extend the 110-day period. A criminal trial arising from an investigation as extensive as the Lockerbie inquiry will inevitably run for a substantial period of time, but the length of the trial is not controlled by the Crown and so it is not possible for my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate to give an estimate of its length.

Cash Limits

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to make any changes to the cash limits for 1994-95 within his responsibility.

Mr. Lang: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval I intend to make changes to two voted cash limits and in addition one of the non-voted cash blocks.

(a) The cash limit for class XIV, vote 3, training programmes, roads and transport services and industrial support, Scotland, will be increased by £74,300,000 from £798,104,000 to £872,404,000. The increase comprises transfers of £70,000,000 from Department of Transport and £4,300,000 from Department of Trade and Industry.

(b) The cash limit for class XIV, vote 9, revenue support grants and payments of non-domestic rates etc, Scotland will be decreased by £62,000 from £4,882,353,000 to £4,882,291,000 after an error was identified in a non-domestic rate income return submitted by a levying authority. The erroneous figure had been used when the Estimates were compiled but it was later corrected in the Revenue Support Grant (Scotland) Order 1994 laid before Parliament on 17 February 1994.

(c) The non-voted cash limit SO/LA2, which covers housing capital expenditure by local authorities and capital expenditure by new towns will be decreased by £6,900,000 from £269,892,000 to £262,992,000. This decrease reflects a transfer of strategic investment sites from new towns to Scottish Enterprise. A compensatory increase was included in the main estimate for class XIV vote 3 for 1994-95.

None of these changes add to the total of public expenditure.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will be in a position to announce the membership of the Scottish advisory body on sustainable development; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Scotland indicated in January his intention to establish an advisory body of experts to examine the practical challenges of sustainable development in Scotland. Professor William Ritchie, vice-principal of Aberdeen university is to chair the body.

The body, which is to be known as the Secretary of State for Scotland's advisory group on sustainable development, will have the following nine members embracing a range of relevant interests:

Nan Burnett: Chairman, South East Regional Board and Board Member, Scottish Natural Heritage.

Ann Foster: Director of the Scottish Consumer Council.

Sir Charles Fraser: Former Chairman of Lothian and Edinburgh Enterprise.

Patricia Henton: Director, Scotland and Northern Ireland, Aspinwall and Co.

Professor Bart McGettrick: Principal, St. Andrew's College of Education.

Councillor Rosemary McKenna: (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth District Council), Senior Vice President of the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

Cameron McLatchie: Chairman and Chief Executive, British Polythene Industries.

Simon Pepper: Head of Operations, World Wide Fund for Nature Scotland.

Professor Roger Willey: Chief Executive of the Environmental Centre for Waste Management at Paisley University.

The Group has been given the following remit:

To advise the Secretary of State for Scotland on:

policy issues and practical challenges for Scotland as a consequence of adopting the principles of sustainable development.

implications for Scotland of advice from the Government's panel on sustainable development for the UK, with which it will maintain regular contact.

measures to achieve the closer integration of environmental issues in the policies and practices of both the private and public sectors across Scotland.

any members referred to the group by the Secretary of State.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make public the report of the chief executive of the NHS Executive's inquiry into the events surrounding the dismissal of the general manager of the Greater Glasgow health board.

Mr. Lang: The chief executive's inquiry is now complete and I have arranged for copies of his report to be placed in the Library.

Railway Restructuring

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if increased funding will be made available to Strathclyde regional council in 1994-95 for the additional costs incurred as a result of the restructuring of the railways and implementation of the new track and rolling stock charging system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Under the new railway charging systems introduced on 1 April 1994, we expect the cost to Strathclyde regional council of maintaining the existing level of Strathclyde passenger transport executive-supported rail services to increase. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport has given an undertaking that the additional costs will be met in full by a transfer of funds from the Department of Transport through the Scottish Office to Strathclyde regional council. Payment will be subject to Strathclyde passenger transport executive and British Rail having made the necessary contractual arrangements. The funds will be in addition to Strathclyde's local government finance settlement and will be disregarded for capping purposes.

Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in a summer supplementary estimate for the training programmes, roads and transport services and industrial support, Scotland vote, class XIV, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £30 million to cover payments in the early part of the current year, will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Prison Staff

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the ratio of staff to prisoners in each prison at the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 June 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman Godman, dated 15 June 1994:

Lord Fraser of Carmyllie has asked me to reply to your question about the ratio of staff to prisoners in each prison.

Prisons (Alcohol Abuse Programmes)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which prisons alcohol abuse and misuse programmes are available to prisoners; how many prisoners (a) commenced and (b) completed the programme in each prison in 1991, 1992, 1993 and so far this year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 June 1994]: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Scottish Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman Godman dated 15 June 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question about alcohol abuse and misuse programmes within Scottish penal establishments, including the number of prisoners commencing and completing available programmes during 1991, 1992, 1993 and so far in 1994.

The table in the Annex shows the information available. Figures for Barlinnie are not presently collated and I will write again when the figures are available.

In 1991, the Scottish Prison Service, in consultation with the Scottish Council on Alcohol, introduced the "Ending Offending" education package. This package was aimed primarily at helping prisoners in the 16 to 30 age group with alcohol related problems address their drinking and offending behaviour. In addition, Alcoholics Anonymous attend most establishments and hold weekly meetings.

Ravenspark Hospital

Mr. Donoh[illegible]e: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 498, when he expects to approve the contract agreed between Burley Health Care plc and Ayrshire and Arran health board for replacement care provision arising out of the planned closure of Ravenspark hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 June 1994]: The decision on whether or not to contract with Burley Health Care plc is a matter for Ayrshire and Arran health board but, in terms of its accountability to the Secretary of State, the board must be able to demonstrate that its purchasing decisions are firmly based on the assessed needs of its population both in the immediate and longer term; will bring greater benefits to patients; and represent value for money. These matters are under discussion with the health board.

WALES

Local Government

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the number of employees of each district and county council in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The latest estimates of local authority staff numbers, excluding those employed under special employment and training measures, are given in the following table.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of senior grade employees of each district and county council in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hip operations carried out in Wales over the last five years have been carried out by (i) consultant orthopaedic surgeons or their registrars and (ii) general surgeons.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of hip replacements carried out as principal operations in the care of consultants for the period is given in the table.

[2] Provisional.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those hospitals in Wales which carry out hip replacement operations; and in which of these the operations take place in theatres with laminar air flow facilities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each of the last five years the number of (a) hip replacement operations and (b) hip revision operations carried out in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of hip replacements and revisions carried out as principal operations during the period is given in the table:

Hospitals

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the hospitals in Wales with accident and emergency units; and which of them have on-site, on-call consultant cover on a 24-hour a day basis.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: All 13 general hospitals in Wales have major accident and emergency units with access to a full range of support services. Details of medical cover, which will vary according to local needs, are not held centrally. The general hospitals concerned are:

Ysbyty Glan Clwyd—Bodelwyddan
Ysbyty Gwynedd—Bangor
Wrexham Maelor—Wrexham
Bronglais General Hospital—Aberystwyth
West Wales General Hospital—Carmarthen
Prince Philip Hospital—Llanelli
Morriston Hospital—Swansea
Princess of Wales Hospital—Bridgend
East Glamorgan General Hospital—Church Village
Prince Charles Hospital—Merthyr Tydfil
Cardiff Royal Infirmary—Cardiff
Royal Gwent Hospital—Newport
Nevill Hall—Abergavenny

Health Workers

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the planned numbers of health visitors, district nurses, school nurses, community psychiatric nurses, health visitor students and district nurse students for each year from 1995 to 1999.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information on planned numbers of health visitors, district nurses, school nurses and community psychiatric nurses is not available in the format requested.

The number of health visitor students and district nurse students are reviewed annually to take account of the latest work force planning information. Figures for 1995-1999 are therefore not available.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of health visitors, district nurses, school nurses and community psychiatric nurses expressed as whole-time equivalents in September in each year from 1988 to 1992.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many health visitors were employed in each health authority or NHS trust in Wales in each year since 1985 in terms of both full-time and part-time employees.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information for nursing staff is available centrally from the NHS payroll system and associated information systems. Detailed breakdowns, from this source, of the number of nursing staff employed by health authorities and NHS trusts into occupational groups such as those requested are not considered reliable.

Nursery and Reception Classes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been made available in each year since 1980 for nursery and reception classes in Welsh local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Resources made available to local authorities through the annual settlement are not hypothecated to individual services. Actual expenditure on nursery and reception classes cannot be separately identified within the data collected centrally.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding the location of residential and nursing homes; if he will make it his policy to increase the powers of planning authorities in this area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since 1 Janaury 1993, my right hon. Friend has received four representations, all of which were objections to proposals to change the use of existing properties to such homes. My right hon. Friend has no proposals to increase the powers available to local planning authorities to control this type of development.

Coxsackie Virus

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the incidence of the coxsackie virus in Wales in the last two years; and in what geographical areas the problem has been identified.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Estimates of the incidence of coxsackie virus infection are based on voluntary reports made to the Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre by microbiology laboratories throughout Wales. The number of cases of coxsackie virus reported by laboratories in Wales in 1992 and 1993 are shown in the table. There are no reported cases as yet in 1994. Information regarding the area of occurrence is not readily available.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research is being undertaken into the coxsackie virus in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No separate research is being carried out in Wales. However, the Public Health Laboratory Service are undertaking a retrospective analysis of the epidemiology of coxsackie virus infection in England and Wales over the last 20 years.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the voluntary all-Wales organisations which are supported financially by his Department; and what amount of support is given to each organisation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is as follows. It is based on funding for 1993-94.

Child Protection (Training)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all changes since 1992 in child protection training procedures for health visitors in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Since 1992 child protection training has been a part of initial training for health visitors and a recommended part of their post-basic and continuing education.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on road maintenance in Wales for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Figures for current expenditure on roads maintenance are:

Financial year	Local authorities[1] £ million	Central government[2] £ million
1989-90	[3]124·7	15·3
1990-91	135·5	18·6
1991-92	141·9	20·9
1992-93	149·3	23·2
1993-94	[4]150·4	[4]26·3

[1] Includes all highways and bridge maintenance, street cleaning for highways purposes, lighting, road safety and associated professional and technical services and net expenditure incurred on behalf of other local authorities under agency agreements.

[2] Expenditure on motorways and trunk roads.

[3] A new definition of current expenditure was introduced in 1990-91 and this figure is not strictly comparable with those of later years.

[4] Provisional figures.

Teachers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many primary schools in each county in Wales have reduced the number of teachers following the introduction of formula funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: An analysis in terms of the number of schools could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the number of teachers in primary schools in each county are given in the table. Formula funding was introduced in April 1990 and so the table compares the numbers of teachers at January 1990 with the most recent data available, which are for Janaury 1993.

There has been an overall increase of 354 teachers across Wales reflecting an increase in pupil numbers. In Powys and Gwynedd pupil numbers have fallen proportionately more than teacher numbers, so the pupil:teacher ratios have improved.

Full-time equivalent teachers in maintained primary schools[1]

	1990	1993	Increase Number	Increase Per cent.
Clwyd	1,510	1,610	100	6·6
Dyfed	1,597	1,625	28	1·8
Gwent	1,798	1,843	45	2·5
Gwynedd	945	926	−19	−2·0

West Glamorgan	1,609	1,646	37	2·3
Wales total	11,932	12,286	354	3·0

[1] Qualified teachers in primary schools at January each year excluding those employed by the LEA who are not allocated to particular schools—for example, peripatetic teachers.

Health Service Waiting Lists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people not on waiting lists for treatment were waiting to see a specialist in the national health service at the end of March.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information relating to the number of people waiting for a first out-patient consultation at NHS hospitals in Wales on 31 March 1994 is due to be published in August 1994. Welsh health authorities and GP fundholders reported 130,440 people on their lists for a first out-patient consultation at 31 March 1994. These may include people waiting for consultations at hospitals outside Wales.

Cash Limits

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits for his Department in the current financial year.

Mr. Redwood: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the cash limit on class XV, vote 2 will be reduced by £9,994,000, from £185,192,000 to £175,198,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 4 will be increased by £967,000, from £564,452,000 to £565,419,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 5 will be increased by £4,820,000, from £487,955,000 to £492,775,000; the cash limit on class XV, vote 8 will be increased by £3,000,000 from £1,498,032,000 to £1,502,032,000. The local authority capital limit—WO/LACAP—will be increased by £1,079,000 from £464,390,000 to £465,811,000.

The decrease in the cash limit for vote 2 is in respect of the planned recovery of an additional payment of grant in aid made to the Welsh Development Agency in 1993-94 to help cover a major receipt expected in that year but delayed until 1994-95.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 4 provides for the expected increase in the number of participants in training for work claiming allowances.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 5 comprises £4,000,000 extra for central Government expenditure on motorways and trunk roads, an additional £500,000 for transport grant for the third Dee crossing and an additional £320,000 for the Staff Commission for Wales.

The increase in the cash limit for vote 8 provides an additional £3,000,000 for central Government expenditure on health and personal social services.

There is also one change to a non-voted cash limit. The increase in the cash limit for WO/LACAP is in respect of an additional £1,000,000 for a housing "under-occupation" initiative; and extra £500,000 for a supplementary credit approval for the third Dee crossing and a reduction of £421,000 as a result of a transfer to the Home Office in respect of the fire service.

None of the proposed changes will add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Cadw

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he has set for Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments Executive Agency.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cadw has been set the following key targets for 1994-95:

(i) To complete 90 per cent. of the approved conservation maintenance programme.

(ii) To complete 40 re-survey lists.

(iii) To resolve 75 per cent. of ad hoc listing cases within 120 days.

(iv) To complete 100 scheduling actions, of which at least 70 per cent. involve additional protection.

(v) To resolve 75 per cent. of listed building consent cases within 28 days, and 90 per cent. of cases within 42 days.

(vi) To resolve 75 per cent. of scheduled monument consent cases within 90 days, and 90 per cent. of cases within 120 days.

(vii) To resolve 80 per cent. of historic buildings grant applications within 17 weeks.

(viii) To resolve 80 per cent. of ancient monument grant applications within six weeks.

(ix) To pay 90 per cent. of properly presented claims for historic buildings and ancient monument grants within four weeks of receipt.

(x) To achieve a market share of 63 per cent. of the number of visitors to the top 20 heritage sites in Wales.

(xi) To increase the average spend per visitor to 206 pence.

(xii) To operate within allocated programme and running cost budgets.

(xiii) To achieve an efficiency saving of 2·0 per cent. on gross running costs.

Full details of Cadw's performance against its targets for 1993-94 will be published in the agency's annual report.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Government Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he plans to publish his departmental guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information, as promised at paragraph 3(ii) of the code issued on 4 April; and what has been the cause of the delay in publishing the departmental guidance.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department's guidance on the implementation of the code of practice on access to Government information has been available since the end of March. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Food Supply

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in his plans to transfer the armed services food supply task to the Navy, Army and Air Force Institute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Negotiations with the Navy, Army and Air Force Institute are proceeding satisfactorily and I expect shortly to be able to provide full details of the future food supply arrangements for the armed services. As part of our review of this task, the future of victualling depots operated by the Ministry of Defence has been examined. This work is continuing, but the conclusions reached so far are that the Royal Navy victualling depots at Burnetts Lane, near Southampton, and Royal Elizabeth Yard, Kirkliston, near Edinburgh, are no longer required. It is therefore proposed the Burnetts Lane should close by 30 September 1995, and that REY Kirkliston should close by 31 March 1996.

These proposals are subject to consultation with the trade unions and other interested parties. No final decisions will be taken until consultation has been completed, and negotiations with NAAFI have been concluded.

HEALTH

Heart Transplants

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals covering the Greater London area carry out heart transplant surgery.

Mr. Sackville: St. George's Healthcare NHS trust, St. George's hospital, Tooting; the Great Ormand Street Hospital for Children NHS trust; and the Royal Brompton hospital which operates in association with Harefield hospital.

Infertility

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what provision is made for (a) infertility treatment and (b) infertility investigation in Sunderland district health authority;

(2) what advice the Sunderland district health authority has sought from her Department as to the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment.

Mr. Sackville: These are matters for the Sunderland district health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. George Bedell, chairman of the authority, for details.

The national health service provides a wide range of treatments for subfertility. Individual health authorities determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Advice is available to health authorities and clinicians in two publications drawn to the attention of the NHS in 1992:

(a) The Effective Health Care Bulletin on management of subfertility, published for the NHS Management Executive by a consortium of Leeds and York Universities and the Research Unit of the Royal College of Physicians.

(b) The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists publication "Infertility—Guidelines For Practice".

Copies of the documents are available in the Library.

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice the West Kent health authority has sought from her Department as to the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment in its area;

(2) what provision is made for (a) infertility investigation and (b) infertility in West Kent health authority.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for West Kent health authority. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Mr. Peter Edgely, the chairman of the authority, for details.

(b) The Royal College of Obstreticians and Gynaecologists publication "Infertility—Guidelines For Practice".

Copies of the documents are available in the Library.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what provision is made for infertility investigation in (a) the South Birmingham district health authority area and (b) the area covered by West Midlands Health.

(2) what is the provision for infertility treatment in (a) the South Birmingham district health authority area and (b) the area covered by West Midlands Health.

(3) whether the South Birmingham district health authority has sought advice from her Department on the most cost-effective and cost-efficient means of providing for infertility investigation and treatment in its area.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for individual health authorities. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. B.

Stoten, chairman of South Birmingham health authority and Mr. B. Edwards, chairman of West Midlands regional health authority for further information.

General Practitioners

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the recruitment of general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of general practitioners is at an all-time high and has risen from 21,357 at 1 October 1979 to 26,289 at 1 October 1993, an increase of over 23 per cent.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on stress among general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: Family doctors deliver a high standard of care across a wide range of services. We recognise that the responsibility for maintaining high-quality services can lead to stress in some doctors and we have recently agreed to provide financial support for a study by the Royal College of General Practitioners into the effects of stress on general practitioners.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) percentage discount rates and (b) special offers have been offered by each national health service trust provider in England to GP fundholders who place block orders for cataract surgery; and if she will indicate the thresholds at which the discount changes.

Dr. Mawhinney: These are local contractual matters between individual national health service trusts and general practitioner fundholders and district health authorities as purchasers.

Nursing Homes

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response she has made following the report by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting on standards of nursing in nursing homes; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I welcome the clear statement by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting that the vast majority of residents of nursing homes are looked after well. I share the UKCC's concern about the rare cases where abuse or neglect by nursing staff occurs. Any single such case is a betrayal of nursing trust.

I endorse the practical advice given in the report and the messages that it sends to the nursing profession, to nurse trainers, to managers and matrons of nursing homes and to district health authorities as responsible for inspections and registration under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

We shall be seeking to ensure that lessons are learned and advice carried forward, in the light of this report, by nurses' representatives, trainers, supervisors and inspectors.

The message of this report is that the number of incidents leading to disciplinary proceedings against a nurse in a nursing home is small in relation to the considerably increased number of residents in nursing homes over the past years.

Nevertheless, we believe that one case is a case too many.

Care in the Community

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list each housing association which is contracted to provide social services under the care in the community programme.

Mr. Bowis: Contracts for social care are made by individual social services authorities in accordance with the needs of their areas.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will itemise each community care service for which there is a charge and indicate the variation in charges found within England.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities are required to make charges for adults for whom they arrange residential accommodation. The amounts payable in charges vary depending on the actual costs of the accommodation and the resources of each resident. Local authorities have discretion about the amount charged for short-stay residents. They also have discretionary powers to make charges for non-residential services. There is no requirement to inform the Department about individual charges.

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate she has undertaken of the effect of the homelessness legislation review on her care in the community policy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Department has been fully involved in the review of access to local authority and housing association tenancies. The Government's conclusions, when announced, will take into account the implications for the policy areas, including care in the community.

Health Expenditure

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 26 May, Official Report, columns 294-95, (1) if she will list all the factors, and their relative weights, taken into account when determining per capita spending by district health and family health services authority;

(2) pursuant to her answer of 26 May, Official Report, columns 294-95, regarding per capita spend by health authorities, what factors determined the relative allocation to (a) Preston and (b) Newham.

Dr. Mawhinney: The figures for per capita spending were calculated by dividing the total expenditure for each authority—from the provisional 1992-93 accounts—by the crude population figures, mid 1992 estimates, for each respective authority.

It is the responsibility of regional health authorities to make allocations to district health authorities and to family health services authorities for cash-limited expenditure. The majority of FHSA expenditure is determined by demand for services and there are no predetermined allocations.

Organ Donation

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her best estimate of the numbers of patients in end-stage renal failure dying each year due to non-availability of sufficient donor organs; what steps she is taking to reduce destruction of such organs; and if she will enter into discussions with the medical profession with a view to establishing an organ transplant opt-out register in place of the current donor cards.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally on the number of people who die while awaiting a kidney transplant. People awaiting kidney transplants may live for many years and may die from causes other than kidney failure. The Government are continuing to take a number of initiatives to increase the number of donor organs available for transplant. The Department of Health is in regular contact with the medical profession on this subject but the legislation for the presumption of consent unless otherwise indicated, regardless of the views of relatives, does not have widespread support.

EDUCATION

Academic Work Force

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his oral answer of 29 March to the hon. Member for Feltham and Heston (Mr. Keen), Official Report, column 787, what study he is making of the age profile of the academic work force.

Mr. Boswell: It is for universities and colleges as employers to consider in the first instance the age profile of their academic staff. My right hon. Friend will continue to keep the general situation under review, in the light of any advice from the Higher Education Funding Council for England.

TREASURY

National Debt

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the United Kingdom's level of non-marketable debt minus national savings has increased in line with Government estimates for each of the last 15 years.

Mr. Nelson: Non-marketable debt represents only a small proportion of total Government debt. Figures for the components of national debt at end-March, including sterling non-marketable debt and national savings, are published annually in the Bank of England's quarterly bulletin debt article—see the November 1993 edition for end-March 1993. Sterling non-marketable debt excluding national savings, calculated from these articles, for the last 15 years are given in the table:

Sterling non-marketable debt excluding national savings

End-March	£ million
1979	1,575
1980	821
1981	1,410
1982	1,968

1989	2,869
1990	3,591
1991	3,389
1992	3,275
1993	4,096

There are no official forecasts of Government debt by instrument.

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Nelson: No specific instructions are issued to security staff; it is the practice for anyone causing a nuisance to be asked to move on. No problems have been experienced in the past three months.

Company Dividends

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for encouraging companies to retain profits rather than distribute them as dividends.

Mr. Nelson: The Chancellor has no plans to intervene in the control of dividends.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average level of dividends of the top 50 companies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury does not monitor individual company results and does not have this information.

Wages

Ms Jowell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average price of 20 cigarettes, the average gross weekly wage for adult male manual workers and the proportion of the latter represented by the former in each year since 1964.

Mr. Nelson: The table shows available data.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the change in the real exchange rate as measured by relative unit values of exports to (a) European Union countries and (b) the rest of the world from January 1993 to the latest available date.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 21 March 1994, Official Report, column 15, which provides references to exchange rate and export price data for Community and other countries, which can be used to calculate the information requested.

Economic Forecast

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish the Government's latest economic forecast.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Under the terms of the Industry Act 1975 the Government have to publish two forecasts a year. Following the move to a unified Budget, forecasts will be published in the summer and in the Budget in November. The first summer forecast will be published on 28 June. Copies will be available from the House of Commons Vote Office at 11 am.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what mechanisms exist for the independent monitoring of charter standards; and if he will give details of the mechanism for each public service covered by a charter.

Mr. David Davis: Under the citizens charter, each public service organisation is responsible for setting its own charter standards and ensuring that they are monitored. The public services publish details of actual performance against standards on a regular basis. Later this month, for example, the Department of Health will publish comparative information on the performance of health authorities. In November, the Department for Education will again publish performance tables for schools and colleges with students in the 16 to 18 age range. London Underground publishes four-weekly performance figures against its charter targets, and British Rail publishes four-weekly performance figures for the punctuality and reliability of lines.

The citizens charter second report published in March 1994 reports generally on the progress achieved in improving standards of service and gives details of new commitments made under the charter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Plug and Socket Harmonisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he will take on the conclusions of reports which he commissioned on plug and socket harmonisation on the level of disruption and costs to industry, customers and the time taken for benefits to accrue.

Mr. McLoughlin: The European Committee for Electrotechnical Standardisation—CENELEC—the body responsible for electrical standards in Europe, has referred the proposed standard back to the relevant technical committee for further work. The study recently undertaken by the Building Services Research and Information Association for my Department will provide a useful factual background for comments from consumers and industry if and when a draft standard is issued for national consultation.

Competitiveness White Paper

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade further to his White paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win", what evidence he has in respect of profit levels of (a) United Kingdom manufacturers and (b) major foreign based manufacturers; and what was the estimated return on capital in manufacturing industry for each year since 1970 in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) other major Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Sainsbury: For the United Kingdom, the gross trading surplus of manufacturing companies and public corporations plus income from self-employment from manufacturing can be obtained from table 2.2 of the Central Statistical Office Blue Book. The rate of return on capital employed by manufacturing companies is shown in CSO Bulletin 64/93 "Profitability of UK Companies (1962-1992)".

Table 14 of the OECD's "National Accounts 1993" contains information on the operating surplus and rates of return on capital employed in manufacturing for OECD countries. These figures are on a slightly different basis from those published by CSO, and are provided for a variety of years.

Copies of all the above-mentioned publications are available in the Library of the House.

Cabling

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the areas of the United Kingdom which have been cabled to date and those areas which are programmed for cabling over the next 12 months.

Mr. McLoughlin: To date, 125 franchises have been licensed, covering 14·5 million homes. Services are now being offered in 65 of these franchises and cable networks now pass over 3 million homes. The cable operators will continue to build out their franchises over the course of the next few years in line with the build obligations set out in their licences. The Department does not hold precise details of the areas which have been cabled, and the construction plans of the cable operators for the next 12 months are primarily a matter for the companies themselves.

Post Office

Ms Ruddock: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that the articles for the blind facility will remain a Freepost service following any reorganisation of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government are well aware of the importance of the free postage facility currently offered by the Royal Mail for articles for the blind. The Green Paper on the Post Office, which is due to be published shortly, will, therefore, make clear that, under any option, the Royal Mail will be required to continue to offer this valued service.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what approval is required from institutions of the European Union, and in what form, for the zero-rating of VAT on postage for letters and parcels in the event of privatisation or part-privatisation of the Post Office.

Mr. McLoughlin: Arrangements in respect of VAT and postal services need to conform with EC VAT legislation and, in particular, the sixth EC VAT directive, which provides VAT exemption for the universal letter and parcel services. In the light of discussions with the European Commission, as well as earlier jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice, the Government are satisfied that privatisation would not mean the imposition of VAT on these services. The Government have made it clear that, under any option that they finally adopt, stamps will continue to be free of VAT.

Fire Safety

Mr. Amess: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will publish the scrutiny team's report and evidence;

(2) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of consideration given to the views of the Fire and Rescue Service in the present deregulation of fire safety legislation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Fire and Rescue Service has taken every opportunity to make its views known to Government and the fire safety review team during the widespread consultation on the review of fire safety legislation and enforcement. I know that the review team has found these and others' comments constructive and comprehensive.

On the question of publication of the review team's report, I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 427-28.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, when he expects to publish the inter-departmental report on fire safety scrutiny.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) on 14 June, Official Report, columns 427-28.

Environmental Information

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many requests he has received for environmental information under the Access to Environmental Information Regulations 1992; and how many requests were refused on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 14 June 1994]: The Department has to date received around 187 requests for information under the Environmental Information Regulations 1992, none of which have been refused on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter of 13 May to the hon. Member for Linlithgow, if he will make an assessment of the background work and credentials of Mr. Max van der Stoel for making a report on Iraq.

The Prime Minister: Mr. van der Stoel is the United Nations special rapporteur on Iraq. It is for the chairman of the Commission on Human Rights to appoint special rapporteurs, who must be impartial. Mr. van der Stoel's international reputation and his wide experience of human rights issues make him an excellent choice as rapporteur on human rights in Iraq.

ENVIRONMENT

Conservation Bodies

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the summary of responses received by his Department as part of the consultation process following his proposal to merge English Nature and the Countryside Commission for England.

Mr. Atkins: A summary of the responses received will be placed in the Library of the House once an announcement has been made on the outcome of the study.

Land Use, West Midlands

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to protect green-field sites in the west midlands region.

Mr. Baldry: The Secretary of State will continue to uphold policies that protect the green belt and open countryside in the west midlands. He will maintain his commitment to urban regeneration and will stress the importance of accommodating any necessary development within urban areas wherever possible.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received as to a need for the release of land for house building in the west midlands.

Mr. Baldry: The West Midlands Forum of Local Authorities has recently submitted advice to the Secretary of State. The forum estimated that 275,000 additional dwellings would be required in the region between 1991 and 2011.

Housing Demand, West Midlands

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the demand for new private sector housing in the west midlands.

Sir George Young: The Secretary of State will set out his view of the need for new housing in the region in the forthcoming consultation draft of regional planning guidance. That need is based on a number of different factors and will be met by housing of a variety of tenures.

County Hall (Sale)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which parts of the county hall complex have been sold; and which parts remain unsold.

Mr. Baldry: The riverside or "main" building has been sold. The remainder of the county hall land and buildings at present remain unsold.

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's standing instructions do not contain anything specifically related to the categories mentioned, nor have there been any problems in the last three months.

Urban Air Quality

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to establish an urban air quality monitoring station in the Nottingham area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We take advice on this matter from the quality of urban air review group and as priorities develop over the next three years, we will consult the review group on the location of monitoring sites.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the current key performance targets for the Building Research Establishment.

Mr. Baldry: The Building Research Establishment is working to the following key targets for 1994-95:

£920,000 net contribution to the Exchequer income to cover full economic costs on a trading basis gross non-Exchequer income of £3·6 million taking into account changes in BRE's charging policy, an improvement of 3 per cent. in the average daily cost of commissions.

TRANSPORT

Transport Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what matters were discussed and what decisions taken at the European Transport Council on 13-14 June in Luxembourg; and how the United Kingdom voted on matters decided by vote.

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of the Transport Council in Luxembourg on 13 and 14 June.

Mr. MacGregor: The Transport Council met in Luxembourg on 13 and 14 June. I represented the United Kingdom.

On the first day, the Council discussed a number of maritime safety issues and reached a common position on proposals on the training of seafarers, minimum standards for ship classification societies and lower port fees for environmentally friendly oil tankers.

I gave a presentation on the Donaldson report into the Braer incident off Shetland. I emphasised three recommendations of special interest: port state control, improved ship identification using transponders and emphasis on the "polluter pays" priniciple. I received strong support from all member states and the Commission, which felt that the report was a very positive basis for future work on maritime safety and agreed to further detailed discussion by the Council.

Other items discussed included maritime competition, freedom to provide maritime services and maritime relations with west Africa.

On the second day, the Council reached provisional agreement, subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve, on a common position on a directive harmonising conditions for transport of dangerous goods by road. The Netherlands and Spain entered abstentions.

The Commission presented a communication on the way forward for civil aviation in Europe, drawn up in response to the wise men's report published in January of this year. I welcomed the Commission's paper, while emphasising the importance of elimination of state aids and full implementation of the third package of aviation liberalisation measures.

Among the other items discussed was a proposed measure that aims to establish common criteria for allocating train paths to operators and charging for access to the railway network. I argued that the scope of the measure should be limited to international services and drew attention to the special treatment that would be needed where traffic rights had already been laid down —for example, the channel tunnel—or where necessary to get new infrastructure built. The Council also discusssed, but made little progress on, mandates for road transport negotiations with eastern Europe and transport negotiations with Switzerland.

Under any other business, I reported on the review recently undertaken by the United Kingdom into the provision of seat belts in coaches and minibuses. My conclusion from this report was that there was now a good case for requiring the fitting of seat belts to new vehicles. I emphasised the importance of this issue for road safety and asked how work was progressing within the Commission. In its response, the Commission informed the Council that it was working on a directive that would introduce new roof rigidity standards and emergency exit requirements. Existing seat belt legislation was also being reviewed under the guidance of a group of experts and a separate proposal covering the fire resistance of materials was being examined. The Commission was committed to having all these proposals on the table by the end of 1994.

Two votes were taken. On the dangerous goods directive, as noted above, I entered a parliamentary scrutiny reserve and the Netherlands and Spain abstained. On the seafarers' training proposal, Italy abstained.

Driving Tests

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the estimated (a) demand and (b) cost to public funds of motorcycle tests over the next three years; what is the cost to the Driving Standards Agency of providing personal protective equipment to each motorcycle examiner; and what is the type and cost of the motorcycles used for the tests;

(2) if he will list the reasons for which the block booking of heavy goods vehicle driving tests has been discontinued by the Driving Standards Agency; and if he will make a statement.

(3) if he will list the number of (a) motorcycle tests and (b) "L" tests conducted at Evesham during the last 12 months and the comparable period for the previous three years; and for how many days a week examiners are employed at Evesham.

(4) what were the costs to public funds following the liquidation of the contractor employed to build the new driving test centre at Worcester; what attempts have been made by the Driving Standards Agency to recover this; and if he will list the reasons as to why these costs were not included in the financial report;

(5) if he will list each driving test centre which currently operates a motorcycle test facility; and which of these he intends to close.

Mr. Key: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Driving Standards Agency under its chief executive, Dr. Ford, and I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from S. J. Ford to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 8 June 1994:

Driving Standards Agency

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to the questions you have raised about DSA's operations.

PQ 2461/93/94

You asked about the costs to public funds following the liquidation of the contractor employed to build the new driving test centre at Worcester, what steps were taken to recover this and why the figures were not included in the Agency's financial report.

Enquiries have been made with the Agency's Managing Agent for the Worcester scheme and with the Contractor Management Information System operated by the Department of the Environment Property Holdings. The Agency has no information to suggest that the contractors concerned with the Worcester scheme have been in receivership or liquidation.

PQ 2462/93/94

You asked which Driving Standards Agency test centres currently provide a motorcycle riding test facility and which of these are to close.

PQ 2466/93/94

You asked the reasons why the present block booking arrangements were being ended by the Driving Standards Agency and for a statement.

As you may be aware, the Secretary of State for Transport recently tasked all parts of the Department to find 20 per cent. efficiency savings over the next two years and this package of measures will help the Agency to achieve its part. The Agency announced in April a package of measures, to be introduced in October, designed to improve service and reduce costs by an estimated £148,000 annually. The package includes ending the present block booking arrangements. As waiting times for driving tests have continued to fall, the inflexibilities of allowing certain training bodies to reserve blocks of driving tests, without naming candidates or paying the test fee, has become/becoming increasingly uneconomic. Block booking involved DSA operating a parallel booking system with the attendant costs having to be recovered from candidates via the test fee. Also, it was unfair as well as inefficient as it prevented cancelled appointments being used by other prospective candidates and meant that examiner time was wasted, reducing productivity and further increasing costs. The revised arrangement will remove an uncompetitive practice which has been the subject of a recent query from the Office of Fair Trading. Trainers will still be able to plan courses and book tests on behalf of trainees, if that is what their pupils prefer, on payment of the relevant fee.

PQ 2484/93/94

You asked about the estimated demand for and costs to public funds of motorcycle tests for the next three years, the cost of providing examiners with protective equipment and the type and cost of motorcycles used for tests.

The estimated demand for motorcycle tests is between 80,000 and 90,000 for each of the financial years 1994-95, 1995-96 and 1996-97. The Agency is currently conducting a tendering exercise for motorcycles to replace the present lease hire contract. Also a new specification for motorcycle clothing is being considered by the Agency with a view to inviting tenders for supply in Autumn 1994. The precise cost of providing the motorcycle testing service, and the types of bikes to be used, during the next three years will not be known until after the tendering exercises.

You asked for the number of motorcycle and car tests conducted at the Evesham driving test centre over the last year and the previous three years as well as how many days a week examiners were employed at the centre. The figures are as follows:

Year	Cars	Motorcycles
April 1990 to March 1991	2,179	n/a
April 1991 to March 1992	1,906	n/a
April 1992 to March 1993	1,934	155
April 1993 to March 1994	1,760	221

Before April 1992 separate figures for motorcycle tests were not kept for outstation centres such as Evesham, where no driving examiners were permanently based. Examiners based at Redditch have been detached to the Evesham centre for between 2 to 4 days per week, depending on demand.

Jubilee Line

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy in respect of the proportion of the jobs created by the construction of the Jubilee line extention to be taken up by members of the communities adjacent to the extension.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 14 June 1994, Official Report, column 523.

Bus and Coach Safety

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research evidence known to his Department demonstrates that the imposition of a ban on coaches using the third lane on motorways would reduce the risk of accidents.

Mr. Key: The available evidence is referred to in the consultation document issued on 9 May 1994, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish W. S. Atkins's independent review of Union Railways' work on the London terminus of the new channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Freeman: I have today published W. S. Atkins's report. Copies have been placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in awarding three-year licences to training and enterprise councils; against what criteria TEC bids are being assessed; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The prospectus which launched the licensing process for training and enterprise councils was published at the end of May. TECs have between now and 1997 to demonstrate that they have met the criteria. We expect that the first licences will be awarded with effect from April 1995.

The criteria cover TEC's corporate plans, strategic impact, programme performance and internal capability.

A copy of the prospectus, "The New Contract Framework: 3 Year Licences", has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many and what proportion of (a) chairmen, (b) chief executives and (c) board members of training and enterprise councils are women.

Miss Widdecombe: Records held centrally on the numbers and proportion of training and enterprise council chairmen, chief executives and board members in England and Wales who are women show the following:

	Number	Propertion Per cent.
Chairmen	3	3·6
Chief Executive	11	13·4
Board Members	120	12·4

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under which treaty provisions Cyprus is prohibited from joining the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat Amory: Under article 0 of the treaty on European Union any European state may apply to become a member of the Union. There is no prohibition in this treaty, or in the treaty of Rome, on Cyprus joining. But there are clearly difficulties in its doing so while the inter-communal dispute remains unresolved. The Council will review Cyprus's application early in 1995 in the light of developments in the inter-communal process. The United Kingdom supports Cyprus's membership application and the Commission's talks with Cyprus to familiarise it with the EC's existing legislation.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the derogations entered by the United Kingdom Government from the Council of Europe recommendations that pertain to the use of personal data; and what was the reason in each case for such a derogation being entered.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom has entered the following reservations. In each case the reservations were entered because the provisions in question were inconsistent with United Kingdom law, policy or practice.

Recommendation No. R(83)10 on the protection of personal data used for scientific research and statistics (adopted 23/9/1983): the United Kingdom reserved its right not to comply with the recommendation as far as it relates to manually processed data.

Recommendation No. R(85)20 on the protection of personal data used for the purposes of direct marketing (adopted 25/10/1985): the United Kingdom reserved its right to comply or not with the first sentence of paragraph 2.4, the second sentence of paragraph 3.1 and with paragraph 3.3 as a whole.

Recommendation No. R(86)1 on the protection of personal data used for social security purposes (adopted 23/1/1986): the United Kingdom reserved its right to comply or not with the second sub-paragraph of paragraph 1.2, the second sentence of paragraph 3.3 and paragraph 5.

Recommendation No. R(87)15 regulating the use of personal data in the police sector (adopted 17/9/1987): the United Kingdom reserved its right to comply or not with principles 2.2 and 2.4.

Recommendation No. R(90)19 on the protection of personal data used for payment and other related operations (adopted 13/9/1990): the United Kingdom reserved its right to comply or not with paragraph 3.3, 3.4, 5.1.c and 7.1.

Recommendation No. R(91)10 on the communication to third parties of personal data held by public bodies (adopted 9/9/1991): the United Kingdom reserved its right to comply or not with principles 6.2 and 6.3 paragraph 2.

Rwanda

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the United Kingdom is taking as a member of the Security Council to ensure that safe areas are established across Rwanda other than those on the border areas and in Kigali.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom supported Security Council resolutions 918 and 925 expanding the United Nations Aid Mission in Rwanda force and mandating it to provide support and protection for civilians at risk. Since the situation on the ground is constantly changing, Security Council resolution 925 gives the force commander the flexibility to deploy his force in the way that he considers most likely to enable UNAMIR to fulfil its mandate.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the United Kingdom and other Security Council members are taking to ensure that those responsible for the genocide in Rwanda are held accountable under the 1948 United Nations genocide convention.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has welcomed the appointment by the special session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva on 24-25 May of a special rapporteur. His task will be to gather information on acts which may constitute breaches of international humanitarian law and crimes against humanity, including acts of genocide, and report to the Secretary-General.

The special session also affirmed that all persons who commit or authorise violations of human rights or international humanitarian law are individually responsible and accountable for those violations and that the international community will exert every effort to bring those responsible to justice, while affirming that the primary responsibility for bringing perpetrators to justice rests with national judicial system.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he supports calls for human rights monitors to be deployed as part of the United Nations force in Rwanda; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom supported the adoption of the recent resolution by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights which, inter alia, called for human rights field officers to be deployed in Rwanda. Proposals for a deployment have not yet been made.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what request the United Kingdom Government have received for logistical assistance with the deployment of UNAMIR troops in Rwanda; and what was their response.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom, along with other United Nations member states, has received a request to provide logistical support. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs informed the House on 15 June, Official Report, column 615, we are keen and ready to provide such support and are looking with the United Nations at ways in which we can contribute, for example by providing trucks. Since the start of the crisis in Rwanda we have given over £11 million in humanitarian aid.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the emergency session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights which met on 24 and 25 May to discuss Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcomed the outcome of the special session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to discuss Rwanda, and in particular its decision to appoint a special rapporteur to investigate the human rights situation, assisted by a team of human rights field officers. We look forward to receiving the first report of the special rapporteur by 24 June.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries which have responded positively to the United Nations Secretary General's appeal for troops to augment United Nations UNAMIR in Rwanda.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Ghana, Senegal, Ethiopia, Zimbabwe, Nigeria, Congo and Mali have all responded positively to the United Nations Secretary-General's appeal for troops to augment UNAMIR.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the predicted timetable for the deployment of the addition 5,500 United Nations troops to Rwanda as agreed under United Nations Security Council resolution 918.

Mr. Hogg: The Secretary-General's report to the Security Council of 31 May 1994 outlined a three-stage deployment schedule. The first stage, the strengthening of the Ghanaian battalion in Kigali and the deployment of a number of military observers is to begin by mid-July 1994. Phase two, the deployment of one mechanised and one motorised battalion, will take place in close synchronisation with phase 1. The timing of phase three, the deployment of an additional two battalions, will depend upon how the initial deployment of the force unfolds.

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each of the last 10 years by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Goodlad: The information requested by the hon. Member is only available for the past nine years and is as follows:

(a) 159
(b) 25
(c) 0
(d)(i)) 184
(d(ii)) 183 (One application granted but job offer not taken up).

British Prisoners Abroad

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British subjects are awaiting trial having been in custody for over one year since arrest in (a) other member states of the European Union, (b) Belgium, (c) Denmark (d) France, (e) Germany, (f) Greece, (g) Italy, (h) the Netherlands, (i) Portugal and (j) Spain.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following numbers of British citizens have been awaiting trial in custody for over one year since arrest:

(a) Belgium	1
(b) Denmark	0
(c) France	10
(d) Germany	4
(e) Greece	0
(f) Italy	0
(g) Netherlands	5
(h) Portugal	4
(i) Spain	40
(j) European Union	64

British Prisoners Abroad

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British subjects are awaiting trial having been in custody for over two years since arrest in (a) other member states of the European Union, (b) Belgium, (c) Denmark, (d) France, (e) Germany, (f) Greece, (g) Italy, (h) the Netherlands, (i) Portugal and (j) Spain.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The following numbers of British citizens have been awaiting trial in custody for over two years since arrest:

	Numbers
(a) European Union	15
(b) Belgium	0
(c) Denmark	0
(d) France	2
(e) Germany	0
(f) Greece	0
(g) Italy	0
(h) Netherlands	0
(i) Portugal	0
(j) Spain	13

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Goodlad: No specific instructions are given to FCO security staff for dealing with anyone sleeping rough in doorways of our buildings or with beggars. We have had no problems with either category.

EC Directives

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the record of member states in implementing EC directives; and how many times the Commission took member states to court in the years 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: These figures were published in the Commission's 1993 report on application of Community law, available in the House Library. They are as follows:

Member States	Percentage of Directives Implemented as at 31 December 1993	Number of Referrals to Court 1989-1993
United Kingdom	92·3	10
Belgium	90·7	48
Denmark	95·4	5
Germany	88·9	19
Greece	88·1	37
Spain	90·1	20
France	89·7	21
Ireland	88·7	17
Italy	88·9	102
Luxembourg	90·7	39
Netherlands	92·4	24
Portugal	89·2	6

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Marketing Board

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when she will announce a decision on the milk marketing board's reorganisation scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Agriculture Act 1993 gave to me and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales the task of deciding on a milk marketing reorganisation scheme submitted by the England and Wales milk marketing board. Since receiving the board's application last October we have conducted two formal rounds of consultation and held discussions with the European Commission, the board itself, the Dairy Trade Federation and other parties whose interests are at stake. We have given full consideration to the many and complex issues involved as required by the Act.

I am able to announce today that we have informed the board of the modifications which we considered necessary to enable us to grant its application for approval. The board has agreed to them and we have granted approval. The industry is therefore poised to take a great step forward.

Under the now approved reorganisation scheme the existing milk marketing scheme will come to an end on 1 November 1994. From that date, producers will be free to sell their milk wherever they wish, while dairies and other purchasers will be free to buy direct from producers. The present system of managed markets and end-use pricing will be replaced by the normal disciplines of a competitive market. Our industry will have greater freedom to compete on level terms within the wider European market.

It is evident that the full benefits of competition could more rapidly be achieved if Community milk quotas were abolished so that production could expand as the reward for success. This remains an important Government objective but not one which can be accomplished overnight. In the meantime I shall continue to press at next week's Council of Agriculture Ministers for milk quota to be made tradeable between producers in different member states.

Up to 1 November 1994, which is vesting day under the board's reorganisation scheme, the requirement for producers to sell their milk to the board remains in force. But after 1 November those producers who continue to want the security of collective marketing will have a number of options. They can form their own marketing groups, as many are already doing in anticipation of the ending of the milk marketing scheme; they can form an association with a particular purchaser; or they can join Milk Marque, the board's successor marketing body under the reorganisation scheme.

The scheme provides for Milk Marque to inherit certain assets of the MMB, including a sum of cash, property, staff and laboratories. It will not inherit Dairy Crest, which is to be floated on the stock market as an independent company. Nor will it inherit Genus, which is to become an independent company with all the shares distributed to producers. National Milk Records will remain with the residuary body for an initial period pending decisions on its longer-term future.

The total market value of the assets to be passed to Milk Marque is around £39 million. In considering whether this transfer was acceptable, my right hon. Friend and I had to balance two considerations in particular. The first was the importance that we both attach to ensuring, in the interests of producers, that Milk Marque has a sound financial base. The second was the need to ensure fairness as between those producers who join the new body and those who do not. We are satisfied that the outcome is a satisfactory balance. Milk Marque will have an adequate asset base but will be required to issue interest-bearing certificates of entitlement so that producers who choose not to join will receive their full share of the value of transferred assets.

I know that many purchasers are opposed to the establishment of a body such as Milk Marque which may have a large share of the market for raw milk in England and Wales. My right hon. Friend and I have considered Milk Marque's proposed trading practices, as we are required to by the Act, and have concluded that, taking account of the amendments made by the board to its October proposals, it does, indeed, take account of the interests of purchasers. Many, if not most, of the fears of the purchasers relate to the possibility of Milk Marque's abusing its market power in a discriminatory or otherwise unfair manner. Milk Marque will, however, be aware that it is under continuous scrutiny and will be well advised to conduct itself in such a way that there are no grounds for complaint. My right hon. Friend and I look to the Office of Fair Trading and the European Commission to monitor the situation closely and to act decisively if the need should arise.

A great deal now has to be accomplished in a short time. Producers who have already signed contracts with Milk Marque, and wish to reconsider, have two weeks from today, that is until 30 June, to give Milk Marque written notice in order to secure release from their contract without paying compensation. I would however urge all producers to come to a decision on who they are going to sell to, and sign up, by four weeks from now. That will give the dairy companies, Milk Marque and others the ability to plan their sales and purchases from 1 November with the maximum of confidence. That is very much in the interests of consumers. It is also important for the flotation prospects of Dairy Crest, in which producers have a particular interest under the scheme.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I will be laying regulations before Parliament to establish the constitution of the residuary MMB which will deal with the MMB's remaining rights and obligations on behalf of producers after vesting day. It is our intention that the residuary body should be required to have due regard to the financial interests of milk producers. It will be answerable to them and not to Government. There will be a strong producer presence on the new board.

I am pleased to be able to announce also that we shall be laying an order to establish a milk development council for England and Wales. This is in response to proposals submitted by the National Farmers Union. The object of the council will be to continue certain functions of the MMB, such as the financing of reseach and development, which would otherwise be likely to lapse. In order to establish how much support for such a body exists among producers my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and I recently carried out a postal ballot of producers in Great Britain. In England and Wales 67 per cent. of the forms sent out were returned. Some 74 per cent. of those voting favoured the establishment of a development council. The Secretary of State for Wales and I conclude that this meets the requirement for substantial support set out in the relevant Act. We hope that a development council will be operational from 1 November or soon after. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is considering whether Scotland should join in.

The granting of approval of the board's reorganisation scheme opens up the prospects of a brighter future. I am pleased, therefore, that the board has agreed to take an important step towards clearing up some of the unfinished business of the past by setting up an arbitration mechanism to deal with claims by certain producers against payment of levy on direct sales of low-fat milk from 1 January 1992. This follows the decision of the European Court of Justice in March that low-fat milk comes within the board's purchasing monopoly. It has been argued that some producers have claims, based in particular on the principle of legitimate expectations, which should limit their levy liability. The board's decision is intended to establish a more flexible and less expensive means of resolving the issues than would be available through the courts. I very much welcome it.

Returning to the board's reorganisation scheme, the Act requires the principles of the approved scheme to be published. We have already published more detail of the proposed scheme than the Act requires in our March consultation document. We are now depositing in the Library of the House two further documents setting out the effects of amendments to the reorganisation scheme submitted by the MMB since March and of the modifications proposed by myself and the Secretary of State and accepted by the board.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Facilities (Children)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what plans he has to improve facilities for children of hon. Members and visitors including changing facilities for babies in the House and its out-buildings.

Mr. Ray Powell: I understand that child care facilities for Members and staff are at present under consideration by the Administration Committee and the House of Commons Commission. The Accommodation and Works Committee would be prepared to examine accommodation requirements arising from any decisions that are taken.

The provision of facilities for the families of Members was among the bids put forward for space in the phase 2 building. The Committee has yet to decide to what extent that request can be accommodated within the limited space available. No change is at present contemplated for the families room. I am confident that the issue of changing facilities for babies will be considered in the context of any planned development of appropriate accommodation.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Civil Servants (Outside Appointments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many job offers were reported by staff in his Department under the requirements of the rules on the acceptance of outside appointments in each year since its establishment by (a) staff of grade 3 and above, (b) staff below grade 3, (c) staff in sections concerned with procurement or contract work, under section 15 of the rules of 1 February 1993 and (d) staff in other sections, under section 14; and how many of these reports were followed by an application to join the company concerned.

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage has been in existence only since April 1992. To date no job offers have been reported by staff in this Department under the requirements of the rules on acceptance of outside appointments.

Public Consultation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage in what circumstances it is his Department's practice, when issuing a public consultation document, to inform those consulted that their responses will be made public unless they explicitly ask for them to be kept confidential; and if he will arrange for his Department to do so in all cases in future.

Mr. Sproat: My Department has not issued any consultation documents where the intention has been to make individual responses available to the public. If such an occasion arose, the Department would make it clear that the response would be made available unless the respondent wished it to remain confidential.

Royal Palaces (Admission Charges)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much has been raised from admission charges to Windsor castle and Buckingham palace.

Mr. Sproat: Gross income, excluding VAT, from admission charges to Buckingham palace state apartments in 1993 was £2·277 million and from admission charges to Windsor castle between 4 January and 31 March 1994 was £0·754 million. Net income from Buckingham palace state apartments and from charges for the precincts of Windsor castle go towards the cost of the restoration of Windsor castle.

Private Members' Bills

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage on what occasions since April 1992 Ministers from his Department have (a) requested parliamentary counsel to assist in preparing amendments to private Members' Bills on behalf of other private Members and (b) authorised officials to instruct parliamentary counsel to prepare amendments which were subsequently passed to private Members.

Mr. Sproat: Parliamentary counsel does not draft amendments on behalf of private Members but on the instructions of Departments acting on the authority of Ministers. On that authority, amendments were drafted by parliamentary counsel on instructions from my Department and subsequently made available following the Government's decision to support Lord Perth's Treasure Bill.

Rugby Union

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assistance his Department has given, directly or indirectly, to the sport of rugby union in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 14 June 1994]: None.

Citizens Charter

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has to introduce a citizens charter for participants in sport.

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 14 June 1994]: None. The main providers of sports facilities in the public sector are local authorities, a number of whom have been awarded the charter mark for their sports and leisure provision. The Sports Council is working towards a set of charter standards for its own services.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Urban Regeneration

15. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for the regeneration of areas of deprivation in Belfast, South.

Mr. Tim Smith: The recently published strategy proposals for the "Making Belfast Work" initiative sets out how the Government propose to tackle deprivation in Belfast.

Equine Exports

16. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many equines were exported from Northern Ireland for human consumption in the past year; what was their value; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: There are no exports of equines for human consumption from Northern Ireland direct to Europe. Horses are exported to both Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland but there is no information available on the number or value of Northern Ireland horses which may be consigned to licensed abattoirs in either country. We will continue to monitor the situation carefully.

Anglo-Irish Talks

17. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest discussions he has had with the Irish Government relating to Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I periodically meet members of the Irish Government to discuss matters of mutual interest. The last such meeting was with Mr. Spring on 23 May. Our discussions are necessarily confidential but are generally the subject of a joint statement at their conclusion.

21. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the talks he has had with the Irish Government relating to a constitutional framework for Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Consultations are continuing with the Irish Government on the construction of a framework conforming to the principles of the joint declaration. This would facilitate a comprehensive political settlement involving the main constitutional parties, and covering all the main relationships in accordance with the statement of 26 March 1991.

24. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he will be putting to the Irish Government for advancing the peace process in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The Government are consulting closely with the Irish Government on the construction of a framework conforming to the principles of the joint declaration which would facilitate a comprehensive political settlement involving the main constitutional parties, and covering all the main relationships in accordance with the statement of 26 March 1991.

28. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with political leaders from Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland about prospects for peace.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have continued, with the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Devizes (Mr. Ancram), to hold such discussions, which necessarily remain confidential.

Inter-party Talks

18. Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement about the progress of the inter-party talks.

Mr. Ancram: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) and for Lewisham, East (Mrs. Prentice) earlier today.

Downing Street Declaration

19. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the benefits to the security situation in Northern Ireland following the Downing street declaration.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I assess that the joint declaration, which is a declaration for democracy and against coercion, has beneficially still further isolated from public support and toleration those who employ violence for political advancement within our democracy.

27. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress on the Downing street declaration.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell).

Open Government

20. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the application to the Northern Ireland Office of the policy on open government.

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office is committed to the application of the principles contained within the code of practice on Government information, which came into effect on 4 April 1994.

Security

22. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Co-operation north and south of the border on matters of security is a matter of great importance for both Governments, and continues to be very effectively practised.

29. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had with the Irish Republic regarding cross-border security.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend).

Integrated Schools

23. Ms Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what support he is giving to integrated schools.

Mr. Ancram: Integrated schools receive 100 per cent. recurrent funding immediately and become eligible for 100 per cent. capital grants when viability is confirmed. In March 1994, the Department of Education for Northern Ireland provided a £1 million grant to the integrated education fund for the development of integrated education. This is in addition to annual grant aid of some £250,000 to the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education.

Domestic Heating

25. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Housing Executive houses are heated by (a) electricity, (b) solid fuel and (c) other means.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive but I am advised by the chief executive that there are 25,605 houses heated by electricity, 125,427 by solid fuel and 1,900 by other means.

Inward Investment

26. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest figures on inward investment to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: The financial year from 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 has been the most successful 12-month period for inward investment since the Industrial Development Board for Northern Ireland was established in 1982.

During the year, 13 projects were secured offering a potential 2,309 jobs. Associated investment in these projects amounts to £259 million.

I am much encouraged by this success, and by the prospects for securing further inward investment for the Province.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what considerations led to the decision to cease the issuing of vehicle registration licences through post offices in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tim Smith: This is an operational matter for the chief executive of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency, Northern Ireland. I understand that he wrote to the hon. Member on 6 June 1994 setting out the reasons for his decision.

WALES

Nursing Students

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what were the number of health visitor students and district nurse students in training expressed as whole-time equivalents in March of each year from 1988 to 1993.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available is given in the table:

Students in Training in Wales[1]

Year	Health visitor	Type of Student District nurse	Enrolled nurse converting[2]
1988	61	62	32
1969	58	61	25
1990	54	50	—
1991	41	37	6
1992	43	30	19
1993	42	29	14

[1] Number of students, as at March of each year. Figures for whole time equivalents are not available. Source: Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting.

[2] Enrolled nurses who are converting to 1st level district nursing ie qualifying as a district nurse.

Children's Charities

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amount of funding his Department has provided for each year since 1991, to (a) Church in Wales Children Society, (b) Barnadoes in Wales, (c) the National Children's Home in Wales (d) the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Wales/Cymru and (e) Save the Children in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Under the support for child and family services grant scheme, some of these organisations have had awards to support various projects from 1991-92 to date. The table sets out, where applicable, the total amount granted in each financial year.

	1991-92 £	1992-93 £	1993-94 £	1994-95 £
Church in Wales Children's Society	21,894	82,693·90	112,350·00	89,077

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to issue a Welsh language version of the document on the "Implications of Local Government Reorganisation in Wales for Health Boundaries and Proposals for Restructuring Health Authorities"; if he will make it his policy to issue all consultation documents in bilingual form; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no plans to issue this paper in Welsh.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet representatives of water companies and the Office of Water Services to discuss the replacement of the present system of basing charges for water and sewerage services by reference to the rateable value of properties.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Decisions on methods of charging are a matter for the water companies in conjunction with the Director General of Water Services. Under existing legislation rateable values cannot be used as a basis for water charging after 31 March 2000.

Radioactive Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what research is currently being conducted in Wales (a) by his Department, (b) on behalf of his Department and (c) as notified to his Department on the levels of radioactive pollution.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Full details of the Welsh Office's environmental research programme in Wales is published annually in "Research Wales", copies of which are placed in the Library of the House. Current research projects on radioactivity involve a study of tidal washed pastures on the eastern Irish sea coast, jointly funded with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of the Environment and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution; and on plutonium in soils in Wales.

As reported in the annual environmental digests for Wales, also placed in the Library of the House, continuous monitoring of radioactivity is carried out on behalf of the Welsh Office by a number of organisations.

Environment

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further commitments he intends to make to publish further reviews of environmental research and the ranking of priorities of environmental protection initiatives in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: As stated on page 9 of "The Environment in Wales: Third Report", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, a review of environmental research priorities has been completed by the Welsh Office. There are at present no plans for a further specific review but the programme continues to be monitored.

Paragraph 12 of the third report sets out the Government's broad objectives for environmental protection in Wales.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what efforts were made to publicise the publication of his Department's third report on the environment in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A press release was issued by the Welsh Office on 10 May to announce publication of the report. Copies of the report were also sent to a wide range of interests in Wales including all local authorities, public bodies and voluntary organisations. Copies were also placed in the Libraries of the House.

Out-of-town Shopping

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) out-of-town shopping centres, (b) out-of-town warehouse parks and (c) warehouse clubs are (i) currently under construction and (ii) have planning permission but have yet to start construction in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what quality indications are used by GP fundholders in determining the hospitals at which they will place contracts for their patients.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The quality measures used to inform the contracting process are a matter for individual GP fundholders. They will include patients charter standards, the quality of clinical care and patient satisfaction.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the details of the circumstances in which GP fund holders cannot refer a patient extra-contractually without the permission of his Department.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The guidance covering extra-contractual referrals from GP fundholders, for non-fundholding procedures, is the same as that for non-fundholder GPs. The Department is involved where GPs wish to refer patients abroad. All other extra-contractual referrals are subject to health authority procedures, and are not affected by fundholding status.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidelines he issues to chief ambulance officers in Wales on the timing and release of information to the press following a 999 call requiring the attendance of an ambulance at a serious road accident.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There are no central guidelines for the release of information by chief anbulance officers. In the event of a major incident, the responsibility for dealing with the media lies with the receiving hospital. A copy of the guidelines dealing with such incidents—Welsh Office circular WHC(93)(69)—has been placed in the Library of the House.

Planning

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue new guidance on the charging policy of local authorities and on minimum standards for providing access to planning documents by local authorities.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has not issued general guidance on local authority fees and charges and has no plans to do so in the near future.

Section 69 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 requires local planning authorities to keep a register of planning applications and to make it available for public inspection. This duty is referred to in planning policy and minerals planning guidance notes produced by the Welsh Office. Welsh Office circular 11/86 gives guidance on the provisions of the Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985. My right hon. Friend has no proposals to issue new guidance.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it a new duty for local authorities to supply copies of planning documents on request.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. The Local Government (Access to Information) Act 1985 provides for public inspection of certain background papers about local authority proceedings. The Copyright Designs and Patents Act 1988 removed certain impediments on copyright and permits the copying of material open to public inspection.

Medical Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the names of the medical consultants who currently hold merit awards in Wales; and if he will indicate the grade that each has been awarded.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information about the awards status of individual consultants is confidential.

Prostheses

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that any directly managed unit or NHS hospital trust which changes the prosthesis used for hip or knee replacement surgery informs all purchasing authorities before such changes are introduced.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The type of prostheses used for hip and knee replacements is currently a matter for agreement between commissioning authorities, GP fundholders and hospitals, when agreeing contracts. Commissioners are able to stipulate that they wish to be informed before any changes are made.

Surgical Appointments

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients have been re-referred in the last three months from in-patient surgical appointments at the Carmarthen and district NHS trust to the Pembrokeshire NHS trust.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is a matter for the health authorities and GP fundholders involved. The information is not held centrally.

Welsh Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library details of the statutory indemnity existing for Dwr Cymru Cyf in respect of costs, damages and expenses not otherwise covered by insurance arising from claims against Dwr Cymru Cyf on the grounds of harm to health arising solely from fluoridation.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Arrangements have been made to do so.

Oystermouth Bus Station

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the public planning inquiry was held at the Guildhall, Swansea into the proposed development at the Oystermouth bus station; and on which date he announced his decision.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The public local enquiry was completed on 16 March 1994. The Secretary of State will announce his decision as quickly as possible after the inspector's report is received.

Home Care Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now issue further guidance to local authorities on the principles to be supplied in determining discretionary charges for home care services.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Guidance on charging for non-residential social services for adults was issued on 18 January 1994 under cover of Welsh Office circular 4/94. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Drug and Alcohol Abuse

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums have been provided by the Welsh Office for health promotion initiatives to combat drug and alcohol misuse in (a) 1993-94 and (b) 1994-95.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A number of statutory and voluntary organisations undertake initiatives to combat drug and alcohol misuse as part of their overall remit. It is not possible to disaggregate this expenditure from total allocation. Additional Welsh Office support is provided for specific national activity. In 1993-94, £90,000 was provided and for the current financial year, some £100,000 is available.

Surgery

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that any directly managed unit or NHS hospital trust which introduces a new form of surgical intervention should inform all purchasers before such changes are introduced.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is a clear expectation that any significant change or development in the pattern of treatment and care should be subject to a dialogue between hospitals and commissioners prior to their introduction.

Nuclear Installations (Cancer)

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the findings of the investigation into the incidence of cancer around Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear installations.

Mr. Redwood: I have today published the report of an investigation into the incidence of cancer around Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear installations over the period 1974 to 1986. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The report gives the results of a statistical analysis of the incidence of seven groups of cancer near to the two installations. The results have been examined by the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment, which concluded that the study demonstrates that there is no association between the incidence of the cancers studied and residence near Wylfa and Trawsfynydd nuclear installations.

In the light of COMARE's conclusions and advice I do not propose any further investigation of the incidence of cancer in the vicinity of Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear installations. The full text of the committee's advice is as follows.

COMARE STATEMENT

Investigation of the Incidence of Cancer around Wylfa and Trawsfynydd Nuclear Installations

Background

A detailed investigation of the incidence of cancer around the Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear installations has been undertaken by the Welsh Cancer Registry. The study has now been published.

The Study

The object of the study was to investigate the incidence rates from 1974-1986 of the following groupings of cancer: all leukaemias, lymphoid leukaemia, all lymphomas, Hodgkin's disease, multiple myeloma, brain cancer and thyroid cancer. These cancers were selected because of their suggested links with radiation in the medical literature at the time the study was undertaken. The geographical regions were defined as the pre-1974 local authority areas within Gwynedd. The time span was the years for which data were available from the Welsh Cancer Registry. Data were analysed by Stone's method for all ages combined and further analyses of lymphoid leukaemia and thyriod cancer were undertaken for three age groups (0-24 years, 25-64 years and 65 years and over).

Results

(i) For both Trawsfynydd and Wylfa no significant results were found for all leukaemias, all lymphomas, Hodgkin's disease, multiple myeloma, brain cancer or thyroid cancer.

(ii) The analysis of lymphoid leukaemia was undertaken separately for acute lymphoblastic leukaemia (ALL) and chronic lymphocytic leukaemia (CLL). However, in attempting to undertake these analyses account had to be taken of the approximately 9 per cent. of registrations which were recorded neither as ALL (ICD code: 204.0) nor CLL (ICD code: 204.1) but as 'other and unspecified lymphoid leukaemia' (ICD codes: 204.2, 204.8 and 204.9). It was not possible to determine the type of lymphoid leukaemia for such cases and therefore the analysis was undertaken in two ways, either with the cases recorded as unspecified lymphoid leukaemia analysed as if they were all ALL or with the cases recorded as unspecified lymphoid leukaemia analysed as if they were all CLL;

The results analysed in these two ways were as follows:

Acute Lymphoblastic Leukaemia (ALL)

(a) Trawsfynydd. No significant results were obtained.

(b) Wylfa. No significant results for ALL were found for all ages and in the age groups 0-24 and 25-64. If the single case of unspecified lymphoid leukaemia was included as ALL a significant result was obtained in the age group 65 and over (P=0·027, two cases observed in the area containing Wylfa compared to 0·25 expected).

Chronic Lymphocytic Leukaemia (CLL)

(a) Trawsfynydd. No significant results were obtained for CLL when analysis was undertaken for all ages and for the age group 65 and over. Considering the age group 25-64 four cases were observed in the area containing the installation compared to 0·57-0·66 expected with the relative risk decreasing as the distance from Trawsfynydd increased (p<0·01).

(b) Wylfa. No significant results were obtained.

(iii) Data for 1987 and 1988 became available during the period of the study. No further cases of lymphoid leukaemia were recorded in the local authority areas containing either installation.

COMARE'S ADVICE TO GOVERNMENT

COMARE considered and welcomed this study.

The Committee endorsed the statistical methods used.

In interpreting the results on ALL at Wylfa, the Committee noted that the statistically significant increase in ALL rests on a single case of unspecified leukaemia being included as acute lymphoid leukaemia rather than chronic lymphoid leukaemia. It was considered that this finding could be disregarded for the following reasons:

Statistical associaton based on a single case is extremely unreliable.

Placing weight of opinion on a finding based on reclassification of a case of unspecified leukaemia to ALL in the 65 years and over age group was felt to be unreasonable, since in this age group chronic leukaemia is very much more common than acute leukaemia.

Equally, the finding of cases of CLL around Trawsfynydd should not give rise to public concern because:

The overwhelming weight of evidence from international studies leads to the conclusions that CLL is a leukaemia sub-type which has not been shown to be associated with, or induced, by ionising radiation. This fact alone should be sufficient to allay concern that environmental radiation might have played a part in causing such cases observed in this study.

CLL is an indolent disease, predominantly of the elderly, which may cause few symptoms over long periods. Diagnosis is often the result of investigation of an unrelated complaint and incidence in a geographical area depends on the intensity of such investigations. Hence the baseline incidence is uncertain, particularly for relatively small areas and it is unwise to calculate rates, raised or otherwise, in subgroups in such areas.

Given the number of statistical tests undertaken on this body of data there is a strong likelihood that at least one subgroup will show a statistical association by chance.

The Committee noted the considerable effort that had been made to confirm the diagnosis in the cases investigated. Further research to establish the diagnosis with greater certainty was not felt to be justified.

The Committee concluded that the study demonstrated no association between the incidence of the cancers studied and residence near Trawsfynydd and Wylfa nuclear stations. No further work to investigate such an association is recommended.

SCOTLAND

Health Care International

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it is his policy that Health Care International will be permitted to seek contracts to treat NHS patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The Health Care International business plan is based on overseas and private business. If however, health boards wish to use HCI to the benefit of patients and they provide value for money my right hon. Friend would not object to HCI or any other private hospital accepting NHS patients in circumstances where the hospital could offer a specific medical technique not readily available elsewhere or where the NHS saw a need for particular waiting lists to be reduced more quickly than the service itself was in a position to achieve.

European Council

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many meetings of the European Council of Ministers took place in the past year; how many Scottish Office Ministers have attended in each case; which Minister attended; and what was the subject discussed at each of these meetings.

Mr. Stewart: The European Council of Ministers meets on average 125 times each year.

Since the beginning of 1993 Scottish Ministers have attended the following meetings:

Date		Minister
25 January 1993	Environment/ Transport Council	Secretary of State
18 March 1993	Fisheries Council	Sir Hector Monro
24 June 1993	Fisheries Council	Sir Hector Monro
20 September 1993	Joint Foreign Affairs/ Agriculture Council	Secretary of State
21 September 1993	Agriculture Council	Secretary of State
20 October 1993	Fisheries Council	Sir Hector Monro
29-30 November 1993	Justice/Interior Issues	Lord Fraser
20 December 1993	Fisheries Council	Sir Hector Monro
12 April 1994	Fisheries Council	Lord Fraser
27-28 May 1994	Justice/Interior issues	Lord Fraser
3-4 June 1994	Regional Policy	Mr. Stewart

In addition to the above, Scottish Office officials have also attended a further 15 Agriculture Councils and four Education Councils since the beginning of 1993.

Agendas for meetings of the Council of Ministers usually cover a number of different subjects, but all within the area of responsibility of the particular Council. Ministers generally report to Parliament on the outcome of discussions at the Council of Ministers.

Raymond Gilmour

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what meetings and discussions his right hon. Friend the Minister of State was involved in the prosecution of the case of Raymond Gilmour when the right hon. Gentleman occupied the office of Solicitor-General for Scotland; what were the subjects of discussions; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not the policy of the Crown to reveal details of private meetings and discussions between prosecutors. Such matters must, for sound reasons of public policy, remain confidential.

Breast Screening

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures are used by Ayrshire and Arran health board to arrange appointments for women for breast screening; in what circumstances this is done without the patient's prior approval; whether this procedure is adopted by other health boards; and if Ayrshire and Arran health board has assessed the costs to them of arranging appointments where the patient has failed to turn up or cancelled her appointment.

Mr. Allan Stewart: National appointment procedures are followed in each breast screening centre. An initial letter inviting the patient to attend on a specific appointment date is sent to each patient based on a list which has been endorsed by the patients' GPs. Experience has shown that if they are offered a firm date, some 80 per cent. of women invited in this way are able to attend without the need for any further letters. The screening centres have assessed the economic implications of call-up and have taken this into account by calling up enough patients to ensure that the maximum numbers are screened after allowing for non-attenders. This still enables all patients to be screened timeously.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the national health service has spent on its breast screening programme in each of the last five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 June 1994]: Expenditure on the Scottish breast screening programme has been as follows:

£ million

Year	Revenue	Capital	Total
1989-90	1·7	3·0	4·7
1990-91	2·8	0·7	3·5
1991-92	3·4	—	3·4
1992-93	3·5	—	3·5
1993-94	3·7	0·2	3·9

Health Service Waiting Lists

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people not on waiting lists for treatment were waiting to see a specialist in the national health service at the end of March.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 15 June 1994]: Information on waiting times to first out-patient appointment is set out in the NHS "Patient Treatment and Waiting Time Bulletin". Copies of the bulletin, which is published quarterly, have been placed in the Library of the House.

Crosshouse Hospital

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department will be taking to seek further compensation for design faults at Crosshouse hospital from the architects Boissevain and Osmond.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 June 1994]: None. In December 1989, Ayrshire and Arran health board accepted an offer of payment from Boissevain and Osmond of £470,000, together with the abandonment of the architect's claim for outstanding professional fees. I am satisfied that this represented a reasonable and acceptable conclusion to the dispute.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the contacts between his Department, the North Ayrshire and Arran NHS trust and Ayrshire and Arran health board concerning the further repair of Crosshouse hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 June 1994]: The management executive of the national health service in Scotland maintains regular contact with all health bodies concerning major capital investment proposals.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the latest faults in the roof and drainage systems of Crosshouse hospital were identified; and whether these were included in Ayrshire and Arran health board's original damages claim with the architects responsible for the building of the hospital.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 June 1994]: Faults in the roof and drainage systems of Crosshouse hospital have been evident since the hospital opened in 1982 and were included in Ayrshire and Arran health board's damages claim against the architects responsible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

May Report

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy that Sir John May's report will be published before the summer recess.

Mr. Maclean: The final report of Sir John May's inquiry will be published as soon as practicable.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount given by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the last five years; how many people were compensated in each of the last five years; how many were compensated for loss of earnings; and if he will break down these figures by category of occupation.

Mr. Maclean: Information about the total amount paid and the numbers of people compensated each year are given in the board's annual reports, copies of which are held in the Library of the House. The board does not collate centrally information about the numbers of people compensated for loss of earnings or categories of occupation. The available information is summarised as follows:

Year	Compensation Paid £ million	Number of Awards Made
1989-90	72·7	27,926
1990-91	109·3	35,190
1991-92	143·7	39,249
1992-93	152·2	36,638
[1]1993-94	165·7	40,635

[1] The figures for 1993-94 are provisional, and subject to audit.

West Midlands Probation Committee

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs his Department incurred in defeating the High Court action by the West Midlands probation committee.

Mr. Maclean: I will write to my hon. Friend when the costs have been settled.

Young Offenders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of 16-year-old (a) men and (b) women being held in prison establishments in England and Wales on 10 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 16 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what was the number of sixteen year old (a) men and (b) women being held in prison establishments in England and Wales on 10 June.

The latest available provisional information is for 30 April 1994. On that date there were 386 sixteen year olds (377 males and 9 females) held in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

Life Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the prison population in England and Wales is serving a life sentence.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 16 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what percentage of the prison population in England and Wales is serving a life sentence.

The latest available information is for 31 March 1994. On that date life sentence prisoners accounted for 8·8 per cent. of the sentenced prison population in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

London Church of Christ

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy toward the London Church of Christ.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our policy towards new religious movements, including the London Church of Christ, is that such groups must be allowed to practise freely so long as their actions remain lawful. We do not believe that legislation should be introduced to restrict the establishment or operation of cults or new religious movements. The existing criminal law is sufficient to regulate the behaviour of individuals who may infringe the rights of others.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Home Office research into the reasons for the termination of cases by the Crown Prosecution Service was completed; and what were its findings.

Mr. Maclean: A report on the Home Office study of termination of cases by the Crown Prosecution Service is nearing completion, and will be published later in the year. An article summarising key findings of the study was published by the Home Office research and statistics department in research bulletin No. 32. A copy of the bulletin is available from the House Library.

Domestic Burglaries, London

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest trend in domestic burglaries in London.

Mr. Maclean: The information available centrally shows that there were 114,778 offences of burglary in a dwelling recorded in the Metropolitan police district in 1993. This represents a fall of 10 per cent. over the previous 12 months.

Child Crime Victims

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy concerning the establishment of a service which would specifically help children who are the victims of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no plans to establish a service specifically to help child victims of crime. Government help for all victims of crime is provided principally through the voluntary organisation Victim Support, which helps families when they or their children have been victims of crime. Help for child victims is also available from other sources, such as the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and Childline, as well as from statutory agencies.

Immigration

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 253, when the hon. Member for Linlithgow may expect to receive the letter on the case of Mrs. Carole Raja.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I wrote to the hon. Member on 14 June.

Sentencing

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of (a) male juveniles and (b) female juveniles convicted of an indictable offence received a custodial sentence in 1993-94;

(2) what percentage of (a) men and (b) women convicted of an indictable offence received a custodial sentence in 1993-94.

Mr. Maclean: Information for 1993 will not be available until the autumn.

Information for 1992 on persons sentenced to immediate custody by age and gender is published in table 7.15 of the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics England and Wales 1992", a copy of which is in the Library.

Prisoners (Mental Health)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in England and Wales were made subject to hospital orders under sections 37 and 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983; and how many were transferred to hospital under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in the year 1993-94.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 May 1994]: Some 156 persons were made subject to hospital orders with restrictions—sections 37 and 41 of the Mental Health Act 1983—in 1992, of whom 51 had previously been transferred from prison to hospital under section 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983. Information for 1993-94 is not yet available.

Information on prisoners transferred to hospital under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 is published annually in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Statistics of Mentally Disordered Offenders England and Wales" of which the latest edition is that for 1992.

Prison Statistics

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners per 100,000 population in (a) each EC country, (b) each other Council of Europe country and (c) the United States of America at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 26 May 1994]: All the EC countries are covered by the statistics collated by the Council of Europe. The latest available information is given in the table.

An article on "International Comparisons of Prison Populations" by Collier and Tarling—Home Office research bulletin No. 23, pages 48 to 54—showed that the figures for different countries are unlikely to be strictly comparable because the definitions of prisons and prisoners vary from one country to another, reflecting different legal and administrative systems. Examples of differences in the definitions are the inclusion or exclusion in a country's figures of juvenile offenders and mentally disordered offenders. The table is not a reliable indication of punitiveness since it takes no account of the relative levels of crime or of the proportions successfully prosecuted.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Divorce

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate has been made of the cost of the provision of divorce information as set out in the Green Paper entitled, "Mediation and the Ground for Divorce."

Mr. John M. Taylor: No decisions have been made about the proposals in the Government's consultation paper. When reponses to that paper have been fully considered, the Lord Chancellor will decide how best to proceed and relevant cost estimates will be prepared.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department with whom he has had consultations over the provision of divorce information as set out in the Green Paper, "Mediation and the Ground for Divorce."

Mr. John M. Taylor: Approximately 700 responses to the consultation paper have been received. Many of those responses referred to the provision of divorce information.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what training he intends to provide for those who will be responsible for the provision of divorce information and mediation under the proposals contained in the Green Paper, "Mediation and the Ground for Divorce."

Mr. John M. Taylor: No decisions have been made about the proposals in the consultation paper. It is therefore too early to decide what training might be required.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the cost of training mediators, pursuant to the proposals contained in the Green Paper, "Mediation and the Ground for Divorce."

Mr. John M. Taylor: Depending upon the decisions which are made about the proposals in the consultation paper, an assessment would be made of the cost of any additional training of mediators.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions his Department has had with the Treasury about the cost of the provision of divorce information as set out in the Government's Green paper, "Mediation and the Ground for Divorce."

Mr. John M. Taylor: Discussions between the Lord Chancellor's Department and the Treasury take place in the usual way. No final conclusions have been reached.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if it is his policy that there should be a phased take-on of work for the mediation service, pursuant to the proposals contained in the Green Paper, "Mediation and the Ground for Divorce."

Mr. John M. Taylor: No decisions have been made about the proposals in the consultation paper. It is therefore too early to decide how they might be implemented.

Legal Aid

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for how many solicitors' offices pre-contract audit for legal aid franchise has been completed; and how many of these solicitors' offices had passed their pre-contract audit, as of 13 May.

Mr. John M. Taylor: By 13 May, 312 pre-contract audits had been carried out. Of the 111 which have been determined, 99 had passed their pre-contract audit.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many solicitors had submitted and not withdrawn applications for legal aid franchises in each of the legal aid areas as of 13 May.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As of 13 May, 1,426 solicitors' offices had submitted and not withdrawn applications for legal aid franchises. The breakdown is as follows:

	Number
London	164
Brighton	105
Reading	182
Bristol	163
Cardiff	62
Birmingham	82
Manchester	96
Newcastle	57
Leeds	100
Nottingham	111
Cambridge	153
Chester	72
Liverpool	79

TRANSPORT

M25

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received from the Spelthorne constituency for and against the finalised proposals for M25 link roads.

Mr. Key: This question relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Wilshire, dated 16 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of representations received from the Spelthorne constituency for and against the M25 link road proposals.

Draft highway Orders for the provision of link roads between junctions 12 and 15 of the M25 were published on 7 April this year. The objection period ends on 15 July. By 7 June, 43 letters of objection and one letter of support from addresses within the Spelthorne constituency had been recorded.

M40

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his latest estimate for daily traffic flows on the M40 between (a) junctions 5 and 6 and (b) junction 6 (Lewknor) and Postcombe;

(2) how many residential properties lie within 100 m, 200 m and 300 m of the M40 between junctions 5 and 6;

(3) what is his Department's estimate of the cost of resurfacing the M40 between junction 6 (Lewknor), and Postcombe with porous asphalt;

(4) how many residential properties lie within 100 m, 200 m and 300 m of the M40 between Lewknor, junction 6 and Postcombe;

(5) what is his Department's estimate of the noise reduction which will be achieved for local residents of resurfacing the M40 between (a) junctions 5 and 6 with hot-rolled asphalt and (b) junction 6 (Lewknor) and Postcombe with porous asphalt;

(6) what is his Department's estimate of the cost of resurfacing the M40 between junctions 5 and 6 with (a) hot-rolled asphalt and (b) porous asphalt.

Mr. Key: These questions relate to operational matters of the Highway Agency. I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Lawrie Haynes, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Lidington, dated 16 June 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Traffic, Mr. Robert Key, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent six Parliamentary Questions about the forthcoming resurfacing of the M40 between Junction 5 (Stokenchurch) and Adwell near Postcombe.

It might be helpful if I were first to fill in some of the background. The obligations placed on the Department of Transport to deal with noise intrusion relate only to where the Department acts in the manner of a developer in providing a new road or in substantially altering an existing one. It follows that the Agency can only undertake maintenance of existing roads for genuine maintenance reasons and, trials apart, then only in the most cost-effective manner. As porous asphalt (PA) is known to be more costly to construct and maintain, normally its use can only be justified at present for new construction works where these higher costs can be offset by savings in the costs of noise mitigation measures which would be otherwise incurred. There are, of course, no similar offsetting saings to be had in the case of maintenance works.

PA is relatively new material which needs to be tested before more wide scale use. The 4½ mile section of the M40 which is now to be re-surfaced was built in the early 1970s and has a jointed concrete carriageway. As we have no experience of overlaying PA on roads constructed in this way, we are taking the opportunity presented by the maintenance to carry out a trial over the 2 mile stretch between Junction 6 and Adwell. This length is quite adequate for trial purposes. The trial is not, therefore, specifically aimed at noise reduction but it is designed to get some of the technical information you seek and more. Interim results are unlikely to be available for at least 18 months. The answers which I give below to your questions should, therefore, be taken as very provisional.

Tenders for the maintenance contract are still being evaluated. Early indications are that the additional construction costs of resurfacing with PA the length between Junction 6 (Lewknor) and Adwell (near Postcombe) will be in the order of £800,000. Using the tenders for that length as the measure, the additional construction costs of using PA on the length between Junctions 5 and 6 would be in the order of £1M. I cannot yet quantify additional maintenance costs.

The Agency has had no reason to undertake accurate assessments of the number of properties close to the M40 in these areas. However, a count made from available plans suggests the numbers may be as follows:

	Number of Properties
Location	100m	200m	300m
Junctions 5—6	30	51	68
Junction 6—Adwell	2	14	56

In 1993 the average traffic flow between Junctions 6 and 7 was 71,200 vehicles per day. There is not a traffic counter between Junctions 5 and 6, but flows there are likely to be broadly similar to the adjoining stretch of motorway.

As the maintenance work is not aimed at noise reduction, we have not carried out any assessment of existing noise levels over the Junctions 5 to 6 length and have not estimated the reductions which might result from the re-surfacing of that length in hot rolled asphalt (HRA). It is likely, however, that the perceived noise levels will be less given the elimination of joints in the present surface.

'Before and after' measurements of noise will be taken at selected sites to quantify the noise reducing properties of PA on the Junction 6 (Lewknor) to Adwell length. The results will not be available for some time. No estimates have been made.

Road Signs

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department intends to change the signs on major roads to include metric distances.

Mr. Key: We would consider such a change only if we were satisfied that the benefits would justify the substantial costs involved.

Road and Rail Investment

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards instituting a common appraisal method for road and rail investment.

Mr. Key: The Department employs a wide range of appraisal procedures which reflect the many considerations that need to be taken into account, such as the importance of benefits to the wider community and the structure of management incentives. But the methods are applied in a way designed to ensure there is no bias in favour of any one mode.

In urban areas the Department is developing the "package approach" to local transport funding. Under this approach the same multi-criteria framework is to be used by local authorities and the Department to assess the merits of all local transport investment proposals.

Small Bus Permits

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations eligible to apply for small bus permits.

Mr. Key: An application for a small bus permit may be made by any body concerned with education, religion, recreation or social welfare or other activities of benefit to the community, provided that the use of a vehicle under a permit meets the requirements of section 19 of the Transport Act 1985. The Secretary of State has designated certain bodies to grant permits to themselves or their local organisations and these are listed in SI 1987 No. 1229—the section 19 Minibus (Designated Bodies) Order 1987—and the amendment to that order, SI 1990 No. 1708.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many small bus permits were issued in each of the last five years.

Mr. Key: The number of small bus permits issued in each of the last five years is given in the table:

Year	Number of permits
1989	4,800
1990	6,230
1991	7,275
1992	5,780
1993	4,775

Cycling Policy

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on cycling policy during National Bike Week.

Mr. Key: I have today released a new statement of our cycling policy which has been developed in consultation with other Government Departments. In it the Government recognise the need for us as a nation to take full account of the benefits which cycling offers.

A change of perceptions is needed. More local authorities should consider cycling from the outset in planning and traffic management. Secure cycle parking should be more widely available near offices, shopping centres and public transport stations. Employers should make available cycle parking, and changing and showering facilities. Cycling should be more widely seen as a sensible means of transport, offering a realistic alternative to the car for local journeys.

We intend to work with other organisations to create the conditions in which more people will choose to cycle.

Copies of the statement have been placed in the Library, and are being sent to all local authorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Eggar: If members of the public are found to be blocking emergency exits or their activities restrict access to departmental buildings, the security guards ask them to move. If any problems arise the police are called. My Department does not keep a separate record of incidents relating to beggars or people sleeping rough.

United Kingdom Energy Authority

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the value of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's nuclear decommissioning liabilities.

Mr. Eggar: When the UKAEA last estimated its decommissioning liabilities in 1990 the estimate was of the order of £3 billion to £4 billion, undiscounted, including liabilities for fuels and wastes. This estimate was based largely on preliminary technical assessments. The estimate has now been updated by a much more detailed and systematic review which started several years ago and which has looked individually at each of the UKAEA's many facilities.

The UKAEA's new central estimate of the cost of decommissioning facilities on its own sites is £6 billion. It also has estimated liabilities of £2 billion for fuels and wastes, and for decommissioning and waste management on BNFL sites—therefore, a total liability of £8 billion. These estimates are undiscounted, in 1993-94 prices. Discounted at 2 per cent. for comparison with figures published by other nuclear businesses, the total estimated cost is £5 billion.

The increase reflects the more systematic review, together with the inclusion in the new estimate of the costs of infrastructure, of care and maintenance where final decommissioning is deferred, and of programme management and supporting research.

Most of the expenditure will not arise until well into the future, with final decommissioning of some facilities taking place in the middle of next century or even later. Because of the unique nature of many of the UKAEA's individual facilities, the cost estimate remains subject to considerable uncertainty. The UKAEA believes that around its total central estimate of £8 billion, the total cost could lie in the range £6 billion to £12 billion.

Coal Industry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which companies have been disallowed from bidding for British Coal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The identify of those parties which have, or have not, pre-qualified for the sales process of British Coal Corporation is commercially confidential. A statement will not be made.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Sproat: My Department has not issued any instructions to its security staff for dealing with those sleeping rough in doorways or beggars. Security guards are instructed to keep all exits clear in case of fire. The Department has not experienced any problems with rough sleepers or beggars.

ENVIRONMENT

Residential Homes (Heating)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of state for the Environment what minimum standards for heating residential accommodation are issued which must be adhered to by local authorities, housing associations and private developers.

Mr. Baldry: When new residential accommodation is constructed in England and Wales, local authorities, housing associations and private developers are required to comply with the building regulations. The regulations contain no specific minimum standards for heating, but part L of those regulations sets requirements for the conservation of fuel and power which include provisions for insulation of the building elements and adequate heating controls. The Government are proposing to lay before Parliament shortly revised regulations which strengthen the requirements of part L.

Safeway Superstore, Hailsham

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the result of the public inquiry into the application by Safeway to build an edge-of-town superstore in Hailsham, Sussex.

Mr. Baldry: It is hoped to issue the decision shortly.

Environment Council

Sir Kenneth Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 8 and 9 June.

Mr. Gummer: I represented the United Kingdom at the Environment Council held in Luxembourg on 8 and 9 June. The Council reached a common position on the draft directive on the landfill of waste by a majority vote with Belgium and France voting against. The agreed text is considerably more flexible than the original Commission proposal and is in line with the United Kingdom's position on subsidiarity. It would allow us to continue to operate our waste disposal sites where we mix domestic waste with other wastes, as long as we maintain stringent controls and monitoring.

The Council discussed climate change issues, including the Commission's proposed carbon/energy tax. The Council agreed to renew the mandate of the working group established at the last Environment Council and requested the group to report to the next ECOFIN and Environment Councils. Council conclusions were also agreed on the Commission White Paper on "Growth, Competitiveness and Employment", focusing on the environmental aspects of trans-European networks and an approach to sustainable economic development which respected environmental needs. The Council had a wide-ranging discussion on points arising from the May session of the United Nations Commission for Sustainable Development and considered various ways to enhance its next session.

A common position was agreed unanimously on the proposed regulation on substances that deplete the ozone layer, based on the text which had been agreed politically last December. The Council also agreed the arrangements for the signature by the Community of the sulphur dioxide protocol. The Council noted progress on the proposed directive on integrated pollution control. My proposal for a Council statement condemning the illegal trade in tiger and rhinoceros products was agreed unanimously.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Arable Area Aid Scheme

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations she has received on discrepancy of treatment of English and Welsh farmers under the arable area aid scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: Since the beginning of the year my right hon. Friend has received 12 representations on Welsh regionalisation arrangements from Members of the House and from farming organisations. These have suggested that area payments to Welsh arable farmers should be at the same level as those to English farmers. Arable area payments are based on historic average cereal yields, as required by EC legislation, and these are lower in Wales than in England.

Phosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's policy on the planned restrictions on naturally occurring phosphates in wholemeal flour and milk products contained in the proposed EC directive on food additives.

Mr. Soames: The Government share industry's concerns that the current text of the proposed directive on food additives other than colours and sweeteners does not take proper account of the fact that phosphates occur naturally in many foods, including flour and milk. We have therefore been pressing for an amendment to the text. The EC Council of Ministers and the European Commission have agreed to find a solution to this problem before the directive is implemented.

Milk Marketing

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions she has had with the Dairy Trade Federation on the timetable for the implementation of the new milk marketing scheme; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: The Dairy Trade Federation raised the issue of the timing of the end of the milk marketing scheme when my right hon. Friend the Minister met them on 23 May.

My right hon. Friend has announced her and the Secretary of State for Wales's decision to approve the milk marketing board's reorganisation scheme with modifications. Under the approved scheme vesting day will be 1 November 1994.

Less-favoured Areas

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the agricultural land area (a) inside and (b) outside the less-favoured areas in England is rented.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information is not available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the average age of farmers is in (a) the English less-favoured areas and (b) the equivalent of the less-favoured areas in each EC member state.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The farm structure survey contains information on the age of the holder of the farm by age band. The table provides estimates of the average age of holder based on analysis of this age band data for farms which are classified as being wholly or mainly in the less favoured areas.

Estimated average age of holder of farms wholly or mainly in the less-favoured areas in 1987[1]

Member state	Estimated average age of holder
Belgium	50
Germany	48
Greece	56
Spain	56
France	52
Ireland	54
Italy	56
Luxembourg	51
Portugal	57
United Kingdom (1990)	53
England (1990)	52

[1] The holder of the farm is the person legally or economically responsible for the holding.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the ratio of tenant farmers to owner-occupier farmers (a) inside and (b) outside the English less-favoured areas.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table shows the proportion of holdings in England which are wholly owner occupied, rented or are partly owner and partly rented for those holdings which are wholly or mainly in the less favoured area or wholly or mainly outside the LFA.

Proportion of holdings in England by type of tenure

Holdings wholly or mainly in the LFA	60·3	18·1	21·6
Holdings wholly or mainly outside the LFA	63·7	15·6	20·7

Overseas Exhibitions

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many visits to overseas exhibitions have been undertaken by Ministers in her Department so far this year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: MAFF Ministers have this year undertaken visits to the ISM sweets and biscuits fair in Cologne; the Salon International de l'Agriculture in Paris; and the Agro-Expo exhibition in Beijing.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he plans to have, and when, with his partners in the European Union and the United Nations on steps to combat Iranian terrorism.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Simpson) on 24 May, column 112.

Identity Badges

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for all British and locally employed staff at British posts overseas who come into contact with the public to wear identity badges.

Mr. Goodlad: With effect from 1 January 1993, British posts overseas were instructed to ensure that, unless there are local security considerations—for example, for entry clearance officers—all staff who come into contact with the public identify themselves.

Mrs. Noor Johan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a decision is to be taken on the application made to the United Kingdom post in Islamabad by Mrs. Noor Jahan, DOB: 1966; Ref: C1573 and her children to enter the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the absence of any information in London about applications from Mrs. Noor Jahan and her children, I have asked the entry clearance officer at the high commission in Islamabad to let me have a report. I shall arrange for the hon. Member to receive a substantive reply from the migration and visa correspondence unit of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office as soon as possible.

Giles Chichester and Michael Rogers

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the status and function of (a) Mr. Giles Chichester and (b) Mr. Michael Rogers in July 1993; what was the purpose of their visit by the United Kingdom mission in Geneva in July 1993; which officials they met; how many pages of cables, facsimile messages or reports he received from the United Kingdom mission in Geneva in relation to the visit; and if he will place those documents in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department has no record of a visit by either man to the United Kingdom's mission in Geneva in July 1993 or at any other time.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which missions, other than those of the United Kingdom, were visited in Geneva in July 1993 by Mr. Giles Chichester; what was the purpose of the visits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department has no record of a visit by a Mr. Giles Chichester to any mission in Geneva, including the United Kingdom's, in July 1993 or at any other time.

Uganda

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Uganda about the present circumstances of Richard Mukasa, recently in Campsfield house, Kidlington.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

We have no information about Mr. Mukasa's circumstances.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the security of the building occupied by the Northern Ireland Office in London lies with the major occupier, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Dentistry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for a review of orthodontic services in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: There are no plans, at present, to undertake a specific review of orthodontic services. The Department of Health and Social Services has however recently commissioned an oral health review group to carry out an analysis of oral health in Northern Ireland, and to make recommendations for improvement. These recommendations will take account of orthodontic needs.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many clients were registered in Northern Ireland with general dental practitioners in each year since 1983.

Mr. Ancram: The registration of patients with general dental practitioners was introduced in October 1990. The registration details from October 1990 onwards are set out in the table.

Year	Number of patients registered
1990	198,585
1991	788,496
1992	976,312
1993	1,010,180

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients are waiting for orthodontic treatment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Information on the total number of people waiting for orthodontic treatment in Northern Ireland is not held centrally.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general dental practitioners in Northern Ireland received remuneration for NHS treatments in each year since 1983.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out as follows:

Year	Number of dentists
1983	377
1984	393
1985	421
1986	428
1987	438
1988	461
1989	483
1990	519
1991	517
1992	525
1993	551

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general dental practitioners in Northern Ireland were registered with the Dental Practice Board in each year since 1983.

Mr. Ancram: The equivalent body in Northern Ireland is the Northern Ireland Central Services Agency. The information requested is set out in the table:

Number of dentists on dental list at 1 July

Year	Number
1983	360
1984	379
1985	397
1986	414
1987	424
1988	447
1989	467
1990	491
1991	517
1992	525
1993	541

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the number of individuals who received private orthodontic treatments in Northern Ireland during the period from 1983 to 1993.

Mr. Ancram: Information on private treatment is not held centrally and it is impossible to give a realistic estimate.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general dental practitioners qualified and took up national health service practice in Northern Ireland in each year since 1983.

Mr. Ancram: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of dentists joining the dental list in Northern Ireland in each year since 1983 is set out in the table:

Year	Number of dentists joining dental list
1983	32
1984	33
1985	44

Year	Number of dentists joining dental list
1986	30
1987	36
1988	46
1989	46
1990	77
1991	37
1992	51
1993	58

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dental de-registrations there were in Northern Ireland in the period 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Ancram: The registration of patients with general dental practitioners was introduced in October 1990. Since then a total of 2,340 patients have been de-registered.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many NHS episodes of orthodontic treatment there were for Northern Ireland for the period 1983 to 1993; and what was the cost of NHS orthodontic treatment for Northern Ireland for the same period.

Mr. Ancram: The number of courses of orthodontic treatment in Northern Ireland from 1983 to 1993 is set out in the table. Information is not available for 1991 and 1992. Information on the cost of orthodontic treatment is not available prior to 1993. For 1993, the cost was £1,686,393.

Number of courses of orthodontic treatment

Year	Number
1983	13,380
1984	10,562
1985	9,671
1986	11,667
1987	5,842
1988	19,391
1989	22,692
1990	25,365
1991[1]	n/a
1992[1]	n/a
1993	17,464

[1] Due to technical difficulties in dental information system, figures are not available for these years.

Childhood and Adolescent Psychiatry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what capital charges were levied on each regional adolescent psychiatric unit in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Ancram: There are no regional adolescent psychiatric units within Northern Ireland.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many beds designated specifically for adolescent psychiatry there were in Northern Ireland in each year since 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Ancram: In Northern Ireland in each year since 1981 to December 1993 the average number of available beds in the child and adolescent psychiatry speciality has been 20. Information on the child and adolescent psychiatry speciality was not collected separately prior to 1981.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children and teenagers suffering from serious mental illnesses were admitted to psychiatric hospitals in Northern Ireland in the period 1979 to 1993.

Mr. Ancram: The information is not available in the form requested. The table provides information on the total number of children and teenagers with one or more admissions to mental illness hospitals/psychiatric units in Northern Ireland between 1989[1] and 1993.

Admissions of Children/Teenagers to Mental Illness Hospitals/ Psychiatric Units in Northern Ireland

[1] Information on the child and adolescent psychiatric speciality was not collected separately prior to 1981.

[2] The data quality is not reliable for these years.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the most common forms of mental illness for children and teenagers; and what was their incidence in Northern Ireland in the period 1979 to 1993.

Mr. Ancram: The table shows the six most common diagnoses for children and teenagers and the numbers discharged from mental illness hospitals/psychiatric units with these diagnoses during the period 1989 to 1993[1]. Information on the incidence of these conditions is not available.

Diagnosis	[1]1989-90	1990-91	1991-92	1992-93
Neurotic Psychosis (eg phobias)	88	85	85	105

Acute Stress Reaction	34	42	39	34
Schizophrenic Psychoses	43	34	35	26

[1] 1989-90 is the earliest date from which the information is available.

Forensic Psychiatry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing and para-medical staff in Northern Ireland are qualified in forensic psychiatry and working in (a) high security units and (b) admission wards in psychiatric hospitals mental health trusts.

Mr. Ancram: There are no high security units or mental health trusts in Northern Ireland.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many forensic psychiatric patients have been treated in Northern Ireland in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many doctors are trained each year in forensic psychiatry; and how many qualified in forensic psychiatry are practising in the NHS in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: During the period of higher specialist training, every junior doctor in psychiatry gets some training in forensic psychiatry and most undertake a six month period of training specifically in the sub-speciality. This enables all consultants to deal with routine forensic psychiatric cases which they may encounter in their day-to-day practice.

There is one consultant forensic psychiatrist currently working 70 per cent. of his time in the Prison Service and 30 per cent. in one of the health and social services boards. A second consultant forensic psychiatrist will be working 50 per cent. in the Prison Service and 50 per cent. in another health and social services board.

The intention is that each board will have a pool of knowledge so that all psychiatric patients who come before the courts will have access to forensic psychiatry.

Deaf People

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many extra-contractual referrals for individuals requiring specialist psychiatric services for deaf people were made in Northern Ireland in 1993-94.

Mr. Ancram: None. Until April 1994 such services were designated as supra-regional and no charge was made.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the national referral patterns and regional referral patterns for all units providing psychiatric services for deaf people in Northern Ireland in each year since 1987.

Mr. Ancram: Separate statistics to show the numbers of people referred for psychiatric services in Northern Ireland who are deaf are not routinely collected. Referral patterns cannot therefore be established.

Ambulance Services

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the NHS ambulance services in Northern Ireland which have contracts with private sector health care providers.

Mr. Ancram: The Eastern ambulance service HSS trust has just agreed a contract with a private clinic. The other three ambulance services in Northern Ireland have no contracts with the private health care sector.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many private patient journeys were undertaken by NHS patients in Northern Ireland for journeys to and from (a) nursing homes and (b) private hospitals in the period from 1985 to 1993; what ambulance charges were levied on these NHS patients and what was the total money earned from these charges for the same period.

Mr. Ancram: Whilst this information is not available in the format requested over the period 1987-88 to 1993-94 a total of 148 patient journeys were charged for. It is not possible to identify the numbers of private patient journeys undertaken to and from nursing homes and private hospitals. Consequently the charges levied and the total money earned is not available.

Information was not collected prior to 1987-88.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many private ambulance contracts there were for Northern Ireland in the period 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Ancram: Over the period 1985 to 1993 no private ambulance contracts were in place in Northern Ireland.

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many psychiatric patients have been contracted out for treatment to the private sector in Northern Ireland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many high security psychiatric patients were admitted to psychiatric wards in non high secure units in Northern Ireland for the period from 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Ancram: None. Psychiatric patients who require treatment in high security hospitals are transferred to special hospitals in Scotland and England. Sixteen patients from Northern Ireland were admitted to special hospitals in Scotland and England in the period 1985 to 1993.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursing and para-medical staff working in psychiatric wards in mental health trust hospitals in Northern Ireland have sustained non-accidental injuries from patients in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not collected centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications to the Independent Living (1993) Fund have been accepted.

Mr. Scott: I am informed by the Director of the Independent Living (1993) Fund that, as at 14 June, 585 applications to the fund have been accepted.

Child Support Agency

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his Department's policy for dealing with correspondence from right hon. and hon. Members regarding the Child Support Agency; what percentage of letters from right hon. and hon. Members he transferred for reply to the chief executive and other officials of the agency; what criteria he applies when deciding which letters are transferred and which warrant a ministerial reply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: In the nine months from September 1993 to May 1994, of a total of 6,894 letters from right hon. and hon. Members on child support matters, 24 per cent. were referred for reply to the chief executive of the Child Support Agency. The criteria for selection of such letters has not changed since the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 9 February at column 365.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many letters he receives on average each month from right hon. and hon. Members relating to the operation of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The number of letters received each month since September 1993 is in the table. The numbers have varied considerably from month to month.

	Number
September 1993	179
October 1993	534
November 1993	1,173
December 1993	846
January 1994	972
February 1994	1,072
March 1994	899
April 1994	692
May 1994	706
Total	6,894

Social Fund

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims were made for assistance from the social fund in the last year for which figures are available; how many were accepted and how many were refused.

Mr. Scott: Information for 1993-94 is in the table.

	Number
Applications	4,039,357
Awards	2,146,714
Refusals	1,705,834

The number of awards and refusals is less than the number of applications because of applications which were withdrawn by applicants; applications which had not been decided at the time of the count; and applications where the applicant did not subsequently respond.

The figures do not include social fund cold weather payments as these are made automatically to those people who qualify.

Public Expenditure

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answers of 20 May, Official Report, column 582, if he will publish a table setting out the principal components of (a) the £568 million spring supplementary estimate affecting cyclical social security spending, (b) the £274 million spring supplementary estimate affecting social security spending falling within the new control total and (c) the late-year reapportionment of social security spending from cyclical to new control total components; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: The principal components of the spring supplementary estimates for class XII, votes 1, 2 and 4 were presented and published on 15 February, reference HC199. This document is available in the Library.

The apportionment of expenditure between cyclical and new control total is statistically determined and develops progressively over the accounting period. Hence the apportionment of the outturn expenditure is not yet finalised. We currently anticipate a switch of around £200 million from cyclical to new control total expenditure.

Housing Benefit

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assumptions about the real value of housing benefit and eligibility for housing benefit underlie the present public expenditure plans; and what plans he has to amend the assumptions as a result of the public expenditure review conducted within the Department of Social Security.

Mr. Hague: The assumptions which have been used to forecast housing benefit expenditure are set out in paragraphs 70 to 80 of the 1994 Social Security departmental report "The Government's expenditure plans 1994-95 to 1996-97". We have assumed that housing benefit will be uprated in April 1995 by 3·25 per cent. and in April 1996 by 3 per cent. the assumed values of the adjusted version of the retail prices index excluding housing costs; see paragraphs 61 and 74 of the report. The assumptions for real rent increases are given in paragraph 78 of the report—private rents increasing by 6·5 per cent. and local authority rent by 5 per cent., both in real terms. The forecasts have used the current rules for eligibility and include all changes to the eligibility rules announced last year. Future expenditure plans will be examined in the light of any changes arising out of the present review of housing benefit.

HEALTH

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom have been diagnosed as having AIDS dementia.

Mr. Sackville: Up to the end of March 1994, 410 of a cumulative total of 9,025 AIDS cases reported in the United Kingdom had HIV encephalopathy at the time of their diagnosis. This may not have been the sole AIDS defining illness present at the time the case was reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre. An unknown number of persons diagnosed with AIDS go on to develop HIV encephalopathy at a later stage. The number of such cases would not be known to CDSC since reports give only those AIDS indicator diseases present at the time of the AIDS diagnosis.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bedspaces for people with AIDS there are currently (a) in London and (b) nationally for (i) respite care, (ii) residential care, (iii) nursing care, (iv) terminal care and (v) AIDS dementia care.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally.

Details of facilities for people with AIDS are contained in regions' AIDS (Control) Act reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Additionally, the 1994 directory of hospice and palliative care services, compiled by the hospice information service and published by the Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund, lists all available hospice and palliative care services in the United Kingdom. A number of these facilities now cater for people with AIDS-related illness and some have been established specifically for them. A copy of the directory is available in the Library.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bed spaces for people with AIDS are being developed (a) in London and (b) nationally for (i) respite care, (ii) residential care, (iii) nursing care, (iv) terminal care and (v) AIDS dementia; and what other services are currently available for people with AIDS dementia.

Mr. Sackville: Information in the form requested is not available centrally.

Regional and district health authorities plan all their services for people with HIV/AIDS in the light of identified need.

The Department is currently funding a research project to identify the extent of need for services for people with AIDS dementia in the Thames area. The research findings are due to be reported early in 1995.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training services are being provided for staff working with people with AIDS dementia, and by whom.

Mr. Sackville: The Department makes available topsliced funding for HIV/AIDS prevention—£49·2 million in 1994-95—which includes provision for the training of a wide range of staff in the care of people with HIV disease.

English National Board course 280 includes training for nurses on identification and responses to the psychiatric needs of people with HIV. The Bethlem royal hospital and the Maudsley hospital have developed a national course specifically for nurses working with people with AIDS dementia. The course was developed with Department of Health support and students from throughout the United Kingdom have attended. The educational pack on HIV for doctors, funded by the Department, contains a module on the needs of a person with AIDS-related psychiatric conditions.

Health Authority Expenditure

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the per capita spending figures are for each regional health authority, district health authority and family health services authority for 1993-94 and 1994-95.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not yet available.

Morning-after Pill

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information she has about the likely incidence of complications and death arising from the use of the morning-after pill; what plans she has to allow such pills to be available over the counter rather than on prescription; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The emergency contraception pill is a combined oral contraceptive which contains higher doses of hormones than many oral contraceptive pills. It is used for only a short duration of time and doctors are advised not to prescribe it to women who may be at risk of thromboembolic disorders. No reports of deaths associated with the use of this product have been received by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and information on precautions and side-effects is contained in the product particulars authorised by the Medicines Control Agency.

Applications for medicinal products to be reclassified to allow supply without prescription are normally made to the Medicines Control Agency by the company holding the licence for that product. Any change would be subject to advice from the relevant Medicines Act committee and the results of statutory consultation with all interested organisations.

Ambulance Services

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list the NHS ambulance services which have contracts with private sector health care providers;

(2) how many private ambulance contracts there were in the period 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many private patient journeys were undertaken by NHS patients in England and Wales for journeys to and from (a) nursing homes and (b) private hospitals in the period from 1985 to 1993; what ambulance charges were levied on these NHS patients; and what was the total money earned from these charges for the same period.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not available centrally.

Dentistry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general dental practitioners qualified and took up NHS practice in each year since 1983.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table. In 1983, the report of the departmental study group on dental manpower recommended a reduction in undergraduate intake to dental schools and in 1987 a similar study recommended further manpower reductions.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what national guidelines exist for the assessment of orthodontic treatment need.

Dr. Mawhinney: An index of treatment need can be used by orthodontic specialists.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many general dental practitioners were registered with the Dental Practice Board in each year since 1983;

(2) how many general dental practitioners received remuneration for NHS treatments in each year since 1983.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the table.

[2] Some dentists have contracts with more than one family health services authority.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her estimate of the number of individuals who received private orthodontic treatments in England and Wales during the period from 1983 to 1993;

(2) what plans she has for review of orthodontic services.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans for a central review of orthodontic services specifically. However, the system of dental remuneration is currently under review, following consultation on the Bloomfield report.

We do not collect information on orthodontic treatment in the private sector.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are waiting for orthodontic treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: Such information as is available is given in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", copies of which are available in the Library.

Forensic Psychiatry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors are trained each year in forensic psychiatry; and how many qualified in forensic psychiatry are practising in the national health service.

Mr. Bowis: The total number of senior registrars and registrars training in forensic psychiatry as at 30 September 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, in England was 40. Approximately one quarter of these will complete training each year. The number of consultants qualified in forensic psychiatry at that time and practising in the national health service in England was 80.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many forensic psychiatric patients have been treated in each year since 1985.

Mr. Bowis: Figures on finished consultant episodes relating to forensic psychiatry between 1988-1989 and 1991-92 for England are shown in the table. Comparable data for the years prior to 1988-89 are not available. These figures exclude patients treated in special hospitals and out-patients.

1989-90	1,020
1990-91	1,106
1991-92	1,458

Information about patients treated in special hospitals is not collected in the same form. The numbers of discharges, including deaths, from special hospitals in each year since 1985 were:

Year	Number

1987	175
1988	196
1989	212
1990	209
1991	189
1992	220
1993	264

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing and para-medical staff are qualified in forensic psychiatry and working in (a) high security units and (b) admission wards in psychiatric hospitals mental health trusts.

Mr. Bowis: There is no specific qualification in forensic psychiatry for nursing and paramedical ward staff.

Psychiatric Patients

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychiatric patients have been contracted out for treatment to the private sector in each year since 1979.

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for each health authority.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is normal practice for a psychiatric patient who is admitted to a ward and then subsequently transferred to another ward to be registered in both wards.

Mr. Bowis: No.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances it is the practice for newly admitted psychiatric patients to be admitted into the vacant beds of other psychiatric patients who are away or on leave for the weekend from their registered hospital.

Mr. Bowis: Patients would be admitted in this way only if there were no other beds available in the hospital and when, in the clinical judgment of the consultant in consultation with the nurse in charge of the relevant ward, such action was appropriate.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing and para-medical staff working in psychiatric wards in mental health trust hospitals have sustained non-accidental injuries from patients in each year since 1985.

Mr. Bowis: This information will be held by individual hospitals and trusts.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is normal practice to register the re-admission of a psychiatric patient on return to their mental health unit from a general hospital on receiving treatment for a physical condition.

Mr. Bowis: Transfers between psychiatric and other units are recorded on the clinical notes, with registration taking place at the first admission to the psychiatric unit.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many high security psychiatric patients were admitted to psychiatric wards in non-high secure units in England and Wales in the period from 1985 to 1993.

Mr. Bowis: The assessment of whether a patient requires treatment in conditions of high security is made by an admissions panel at each of the three special hospitals. All patients assessed as requiring such treatment are admitted to the special hospital.

Deaf People

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the national referral patterns and regional referral patterns for all units providing psychiatric services for deaf people in each year since 1987.

Mr. Bowis: Referrals to units providing psychiatric services for deaf people are made by general practitioners and other professionals and are funded by district health authorities. They will hold their respective records on referrals.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra-contractual referrals for individuals requiring specialist psychiatric services for deaf people were made in 1993-94.

Mr. Bowis: A total of 2,776 occupied bed days and 143 day care sessions in 1993-94.

Childhood and Adolescent Psychiatry

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the national referral pattern for adolescent psychiatric services; and what was the regional breakdown of contractual referrals for each health region for the period 1979 to 1993.

Mr. Bowis: Adolescent psychiatric services take place in a variety of settings from primary health care to highly specialised units. Most adolescents are seen by a multi-disciplinary team in a clinic or unit with only a very small minority being referred for specialist in-patient care.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the most common forms of mental illness for children and teenagers; and what was their incidence in the period 1979 to 1993.

Mr. Bowis: There are a wide range of mental health disorders with varying degrees of prevalence of which most are conduct and emotional disorders. Their prevalence range from 7 to 21 per cent. depending on such factors as the age of the child and whether the child is living in an urban or rural setting.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what capital charges were levied on each regional adolescent psychiatric unit in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Sackville: Estimates of the level of capital charges which will be included in contract prices are collected in respect of individual trusts and authorities. This information is provided as an estimate for the trust or authority as a whole and is not broken down to reflect the amount of charge that will be recovered through the provision of any particular service that the trust or authority may provide.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds designated specifically for adolescent psychiatry there were in each year since 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Bowis: Adolescent beds are not identified separately in central Government statistics.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children and teenagers suffering from serious mental illnesses were admitted to psychiatric hospitals in the period 1979 to 1993.

Mr. Bowis: This information is not collected in the form requested. Figures on finished consultant episodes and deaths and discharges relating to child and adolescent psychiatry for England are shown in the table for the years for which figures are available.

Administrative Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of managers and clerical and administrative staff employed by each regional health authority in 1993-94.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 12 May at column 219.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will set up specialist centres to look at all aspects of radiotherapy injuries; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will meet members of the Radiotherapy Action Group Exposure; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what action she has taken to ensure that radiotherapy in the NHS is properly supervised; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I am very concerned that patients receiving radiotherapy should have confidence in their treatment. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, Baroness Cumberlege, has met recently representatives from Radiotherapy Action Group Exposure, together with Government's Chief Medical Officer, to discuss how best to consider their concerns. We are also working closely with the Royal College of Radiologists. We have agreed to establish a group of professionals and lay people to consider guidelines for the care of those who have suffered tissue damage following radiotherapy for breast cancer.

In 1991, the Department issued guidance entitled "Quality Assurance in Radiotherapy" which set out 18 requirements to be maintained to ensure quality in radiotherapy treatment. This guidance has been considered in two radiotherapy centres and the results set out in the document "Quality Assurance in Radiotherapy—A Quality Management System for Radiotherapy", which has recently been widely circulated. Copies of these documents will be placed in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made as to the adequacy of provision of suitable accommodation for young offenders being held on remand in the west country;

(2) if he will construct a table showing the number of places available for young offenders on remand in the west country in each relevant institution.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Maclennan, dated 17 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about accommodation for young offenders on remand in the West Country. The information given relates to the two Prison Service areas of Wessex & Wales and the West.

Most young offenders on remand are held in specially designated remand centres. Those in the West Country are listed in the attached table, which shows for each of them its certified normal accommodation (CNA), operational capacity, population, population as a percentage of CNA and population as a percentage of operational capacity, for Tuesday 14 June 1994. Her Majesty's Remand Centre Swansea is currently closed for refurbishment.

Young offenders on remand can also be held at the following local prisons: Exeter; Gloucester; Pucklechurch (for female prisoners); and, exceptionally, Cardiff and Dorchester. On occasions, a small number of young remand prisoners may be held at Portland, which operates normally as a young offender institution (that is, for sentenced young offenders). The accommodation at these establishments is not separately designated for adults and young offenders.

Police Cells

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in police cells in each police force area in England at the latest date for which figures are available (a) on remand in custody awaiting trial, (b) on remand in custody awaiting sentence and (c) having been tried and released.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Peter Pike, dated 17 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the numbers of prisoners held in police cells, sub-divided into remands awaiting trial, remands awaiting sentence and those tried and released.

The only sub-division possible from information available centrally is between remands and convicted. As at 13 June, on this basis, the position was as follows:

Police Force	Remands	Convicted	Total
Greater Manchester	99	21	120
South Yorkshire	0	1	1
Totals:	99	22	121

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement concerning the cost of implementing the proposed European Commission directive on data protection; and if he will place background material or submissions from data user organisations in the Library;

(2) if he will make a statement concerning the costs of implementing the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A recent survey, involving returns on behalf of some 625 organisations in the United Kingdom, suggested that the cost of implementing the directive in its present form within those organisations could come to some £2·24 billion, with annual costs thereafter of some £308 million. The organisations represented in the survey were only a small proportion of all users of personal data in the United Kingdom, so the total United Kingdom costs could be very considerably higher. No figures are available of the total costs to data users of the current data protection legislation: the survey suggested that the current annual cost for the organisations represented is some £13 million.

I am placing the paper showing the results of the survey in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he has plans to amend the Data Protection Act 1984 to reduce the bureaucratic burden associated with registration; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what effect his initiative in relation to reducing the burden of bureaucracy will have on the operating of the Data Protection Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The deregulation task force recommended that the data protection regime should be simplified. No action on this can usefully be taken, however, until the outcome of negotiations on the EC data protection directive is known. In its present form, the draft directive would impose additional burdens on data users, and the United Kingdom has been arguing for significant improvements to the text.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement in relation to progress being made towards agreement on the proposed European Commission directive on data protection; and if he will outline the areas where there is still disagreement between member states.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Council working party has now concluded its second reading of the revised text of the draft directive, and a report has been submitted to the Council of Ministers. It is not the practice during negotiations to disclose the extent of agreement or disagreement on any particular issue. Some progress has been made, but the range of views expressed continues to be very wide.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the measures in force to prevent the disclosure of private information being gained by misrepresentation;

(2) for the Home Department what proposals he has in respect of the buying and selling of information that is being gained illegally from computer databases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Data Protection Act 1984 requires users of computerised personal data to take appropriate security measures against unauthorised access to, or disclosure of, the data. In addition, it is an offence under the act knowingly or recklessly to disclose data otherwise than in accordance with the relevant entry in the register of data users held by the Data Protection Registrar.

There may, however, be a small lacuna in the law in respect of third parties who secure the disclosure of information by deception. For this reason, the Government intend to make it an offence to procure the disclosure of data in circumstances not covered by the register entry of the data user concerned. We believe the problem is best dealt with at the point where the data are obtained, rather than at the subsequent stage where use is made of them.

Rights of the Child

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken by his Department in fulfilment of article 3.3 of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child adopted by the United Kingdom Government in December 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Establishments in the Prison Service which have responsibilities for the care and protection of children are regularly inspected by Home Office health and safety inspectors, and by HM inspectorate of prisons. Remedial action is recommended whenever they consider these necessary standards are not met. Such recommendations are taken seriously and acted upon by the Prison Service.

The three units for mothers and babies in prison have been inspected twice by the social services inspectorate, and new guidance on the management of the units has been issued based on their recommendations.

A new health and safety policy unit has been set up within the directorate of health care in Prison Service headquarters, to monitor the delivery of the Prison Service health and safety policy in all establishments, and where necessary to insist upon remedial action.

Fire Safety Legislation

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the scrutiny team's report on interdepartmental fire safety legislation; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The report of the scrutiny team was received recently by Ministers and initial consideration of its contents and associated matters has only just begun. No decision has yet been taken on publication.

Remand Prisoners

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners currently in custody awaiting trial have been categorised as category A prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mrs. Audrey Wise, dated 17 June 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of remand prisoners who have been categorised as category A.

On 14 June, 136 remand prisoners in custody awaiting trial were categorised as category A.

Campsfield House

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which organisation paid for the extra security, medical and other costs incurred during the hunger strike at Campsfield house in March; and what was the value of the extra costs incurred.

Mr. Charles Wardle: These costs were met by the Home Office and amounted in March to £163,000.

Ms Elizabeth Frimpong

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the deportation of Ms Elizabeth Frimpong to Accra, Ghana on 20 May.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Ms Frimpong was not deported. She was refused leave to enter the United Kingdom and removed in accordance with schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971 at the carrying company's expense. I am therefore not aware of the cost.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were admitted as persons of independent means to the United Kingdom in each year from 1979 to 1993; of these, how many were admitted on the basis of remitting £500,000; and what character checks were made before the grant of clearance was given.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of his Department in relation to divulging to (a) the media and (b) other third parties any information concerning applications in the United Kingdom for political asylum; and what assessment he has made of whether his Department's policy was properly observed in the case of Ms Tamara Norashkaryan.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It remains the normal policy not to divulge to any third party, including the media, the fact that an individual has applied for asylum or has been granted or refused asylum. However, where an applicant chooses for their own reasons to publicise details of their application, the nature of the consideration, or any decision made in respect of it, we reserve the right to comment publicly on their statements, if appropriate. I am satisfied that this policy is properly observed.

"Travel Information Manual"

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice and assistance has been offered by his officials to those who compile the "Travel Information Manual" used by British Airways and other airlines; if he will arrange for his officials to ensure advice contained in the manual is in line with British immigration law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Immigration and Nationality Department routinely provides the publishers of the "Travel Information Manual" with factual information about United Kingdom passport, visa and other entry clearance requirements, but has no editorial control over the way in which this information is presented.

SCOTLAND

Sheep Premium Grants

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated number of farmers in Scotland entitled to receive sheep premium grants; how many were settled by (a) 30 April, (b) 15 May and (c) 31 May and what each of those numbers of claims represents as a percentage of the estimated number of farmers in Scotland entitled to receive those grants.

Sir Hector Monro: Over 23,500 Scottish sheep producers currently hold quota and, provided they met the other requirements of the 1993 sheep annual premium scheme, were eligible to recieve premium under that scheme. Many farmers combine to form producer groups and the total number of 1993 claims received was 16,846. The number and percentage of those claims paid are as follows:

	Advance payment		Final payment
	Number	Per cent.	Number	Per cent.
By 30 April	15,583	92.5	Nil	—
By 15 May	15,657	92·9	15,503	92·0
By 31 May	15,657	92·9	15,503	92·0

DEFENCE

Type 23 Frigate

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on whether a company linked with Tricorp International of France can take over the contract to complete the work on the final type 23 frigate at Swan Hunter, Tyneside.

Mr. Aitken: Negotiations on the novation of the type 23 frigate contract continue with the owners of Constructions Mécaniques de Normandie in respect of their prospective purchase of Swan Hunter Shipbuilders (in administrative receivership). These negotiations are commercially confidential to the company, but the outcome will depend on the owners of CMN purchasing the yard, who have stated that this would be conditional upon Swan Hunter winning the current competition for the refurbishment of the landing ship logistic, RFA Sir Bedivere.

WALES

M4

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to resurface the eastbound carriageway of the M4 between junctions 45 and 44.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A scheme is in preparation for resurfacing the Morriston bypass—junctions 44 to 46. A start is expected later this financial year.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the total mileage of the M4 in Wales is fitted with side rumble markings; and what plans he has to fit the whole of the M4 in Wales with such markings.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A total of 60 per cent. of the whole length of the M4 in Wales has side rumble markings. Rumble markings will be laid on the remainder during the next two to three years.

Departmental Management Plan

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a copy of the Welsh Office departmental management plan.

Mr. Redwood: No. The Welsh Office's departmental management plan is intended primarily for internal management and control purposes. Information on the Department's aims, objectives and priorities is included in the Welsh Office departmental report, which was published in March 1994.

Rough Sleepers and Beggars

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what instructions are given to security staff in his departmental offices in London for dealing with (a) those sleeping rough in departmental doorways and (b) beggars in the vicinity; and how many problems have been experienced with each category in the last three months.

Mr. Redwood: None, none and none.

Cataract Surgery

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what (a) percentage discount rates and (b) special offers have been offered by each provider NHS trust in Wales to GP fundholders who place block orders for cataract surgery; and if he will indicate the numbers of throughput thresholds at which the discount offered changes.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information of the kind requested is not held centrally. Prices charged by NHS trusts should be calculated according to the principles established by the guidance on costing for contracting, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Marine Projects

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the 36 schemes referred to in section J2(2) on page 20 of supply estimates 1994-95, class XV, Wales; and if he will indicate the rate of grant payable to each scheme.

Mr. Redwood: The list of schemes is set out as follows. Grant rates range between 35 per cent. and 75 per cent., but specific grant rates are available only for those schemes already approved.

Medical Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a list of the members of the Health Merit Awards Committee in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Copies of the membership of both the C awards committee and the higher awards committee for Wales have been placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many permanent staff are employed in each of the 58 divisions indicated in figure 1·01 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1994-95 to 1996-97," Cm. 2515.

Mr. Redwood: The total number of permanent staff employed by my Department at May 1994 is 2,363·5.

The following table shows the numbers of permanent staff in each division.

In addition there are 45·5 senior staff and their immediate support staff and 118 staff mainly on unpaid or maternity leave who are not assigned to a division.

The figures do not include the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, which is a separate Government Department.

Departmental Circulars

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all circulars issued by his Department since 1985 on the investigation of serious untoward incidents affecting patients; and if he will place a copy of each of those circulars in the Library.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The circulars involved are "Reporting accidents with and defects in medical products, buildings and plant, and other medical and non-medical equipment and supplies"—WHC(89)26—and an addendum to this circular issued in December 1989. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House, as will the revised version currently being developed.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what issues his advisory committee for Wales on National Rivers Authority functions has considered since the publication of its second annual report in December 1992.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The committee's third annual report has been published and copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Arable Aid Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the aggregate loss of arable aid payments to farmers in less-favoured areas of Wales in 1994-95 as a result of the decision to divide Wales into two regions for arable aid on the basis of the LFA/non-LFA boundary, in comparison with what they would have received if Wales had been treated as one region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 14 June 1994]: If Wales were treated as one region in 1994-95, the total payment for cereals to Welsh farmers in the LFA would be approximately £1·5 million[1]. With Wales divided into two regions on the basis of the LFA/non-LFA boundary, the total payment available to Welsh farmers in the LFA in 1994-95 will be approximately £1·1 million[1], the same as in 1993-94. It is not fair to say that farmers have lost compared with some hypothetical figure: total cereals payments in 1994-95 will actually remain the same in the LFA as they were in 1993-94.

[1] These figures assume:

(i) That the area of land on which arable aid payments for cereals are claimed in the 1994-95 marketing year is the same as that in 1993-94;

(ii) That the proportions of LFA and non-LFA land on which claims are made in the 1994-95 marketing year remain the same as in 1993-94; and

(iii) A green rate of £0·920969 per ecu, ie the current rate. Actual payments for the 1994-95 marketing year will depend on the green rate in force on 1 July 1994.

Arable Aid Scheme

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the aggregate loss of arable aid payments to farmers in Wales in 1994-95 as a result of the decision to treat England and Wales as two regions for arable aid, in comparison with what they would have received if England and Wales had been treated as one region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 14 June 1994]: If England and Wales were treated as one region in 1994-95 the total payment for cereals to Welsh farmers would be approximately £6·9 million[1]. With Wales treated separately the total payment will be approximately £5·5 million[1]. This compares with an actual total payment of £4·1 million last year, an increase of £1·4 million or more than one third. It is not sensible to call a comparison with some better hypothetical system a loss, when payments will go up.

[1] These figures assume that the area of land on which arable aid payments for cereals are claimed in Wales for the 1994-95 marketing year is the same as that in 1993-94 and a green rate of £0·920969 per ecu, ie the current rate. Actual payments for the 1994-95 marketing year will depend on the green rate in force on 1 July 1994.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

SIXTH SERIES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SESSION 1993–94

VOLUME 244

23rd May—17th June 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
